

Judge Cracks Down On Speeders In County; Two Sent To Roads Monday

Saturday night and early Sunday morning seemed to be, at least for Moore County, the time for speeders to try and escape from pursuing law officers.

Three separate chases, all in which the would-be escapees roared their cars up to more than 85 miles per hour, happened in different parts of the county.

Norman F. Scarboro, an 18-year-old Marine from Raeford who was home on leave, was found guilty in Moore Recorder's Court Monday of driving drunk, speeding and careless and reckless driving. He was given a four months road sentence and recommended imprisonment at a first offender's camp.

Officers recounting the story said that Scarboro was first encountered by State Highway Patrolman C. G. Wimberly at Manly about 10 o'clock Saturday night. Wimberly, knowing that a speed clock was being operated north on US Highway 1 by the other members of the patrol, called ahead and warned them that Scarboro's car was heading that way.

Patrolman R. R. Samuels, who had left Manly just minutes before going north, pulled off the road to await the car. When Scarboro's car passed Samuels the patrolman fell in behind him but got tied up in traffic and got behind.

Scarboro's car passed the clock at 72 miles per hour, the officers testified.

Patrolman E. G. Shomaker and Cpl. Jim McColman, who had been working the clock, also roared in pursuit of Scarboro.

Just before reaching Vass, Patrolman Samuels said, Scarboro passed four cars on a curve, narrowly escaping death to himself and passengers in the other cars.

Once again, Samuels said, Scarboro narrowly escaped death when he continued driving in the wrong lane and forced three cars off the highway.

The patrolman finally managed to get the youthful Marine stopped about two miles south of Cameron. When asked why he had been driving at such high rates of speed in such a careless and dangerous manner, Scarboro responded: "My buddy, who is in the back seat, has been shot and I'm taking him to a hospital."

The officers could find no one in the back seat. Scarboro, they said, was quite drunk.

When Scarboro's father asked for mercy in court Monday, Judge Rowe commented: "Driving a car in the manner he did is equally as dangerous, in my opinion, as a man running down the road with a loaded pistol shooting at people."

In another case Monday Joe Franklin Spivey of Route 1, Carthage, drew six months on the roads for speeding from officers.

According to Robbins police chief W. F. Thrower, Spivey roared into town at a speed in excess of 55, going all the way up to 73 at one point.

Thrower, along with policeman James E. Blake, chased him through town at speeds up to 73 and out of town at varying speeds from 70 to 95, they testified.

Spivey, they said, came close to wrecking at least twice. Once he took a curve on two wheels and almost lost the road. He finally was stopped about two miles from the Robbins city limits on Hemp Street Extension after hitting his brakes, skidding about 150 feet, jumping a six-foot ditch and coming to rest in an embankment with the front end of his car torn up.

Officers found part of a bottle of gin in his car.

Spivey did not take the witness stand and pleaded guilty on all

In passing a six-months road sentence, Judge Rowe said that motorists in the area were lucky that night that they didn't get close to Spivey. "This could have been one of those terrible tragedies," he said.

One other case, which also happened Saturday, was not tried this week.

Southern Pines policemen Yonts and Stout had stopped a car full of young boys about 1:15 Saturday morning and were questioning them.

Someone, they reported, backed out of a driveway and, after almost hitting the police car, roared off.

A chase that got up to 80 miles per hour in town and 100 miles per hour out of town finally ended when the officers forced the car off the road near the water plant on the Carthage road.

They arrested Gene Ray Jones, a soldier at Fort Bragg.

Jones told them he had been caught in town once before "and didn't want to get caught again."

He is scheduled to be tried after the special term of Superior Court, which begins August 13, is finished.
