Governor Allots $800,000 For U. S. Highway 1 Project

US Highway 1, undergoing considerable rebuilding and improvement in Moore County, received another boost last Friday when Governor Hodges allocated $800,000 for improvements South of Raleigh.

The money came from a $13 million plus highway fund surplus accumulated during the past two fiscal years.

The US 1 project, under study for several years, would provide a new route for several miles south of Raleigh. It falls into an overall plan for maintaining the highway as an integral part of North - South travel in North Carolina.

The Southern Pines Town Council, which held a special meeting Friday morning, voted to express gratitude and admiration for the allocation, which it said in a telegram to Governor Hodges would "assure highway improvements long so critically needed."

"Caveat Emptor." CHUB SEAWELL, Ex-Republican. Seawell, it will be remembered, read himself out of the Republican Party several years back. He has said repeatedly since then that one of the chief reasons for his leaving the Party was that President Eisenhower and other leaders had failed to make any attempts to help build a two-party system in the South.

"What we are seeing right now," he said Monday when questioned about his letter, "is a return of the old carpet bagging system that the South was subjected to after the Civil War. The Republican Party, I'm afraid, is being run from the top, rather than from the local level. The Washington crowd is completely ignoring what Republicans at the local level want. Instead, they send a man down here, he pokes around and, first thing you know, they've appointed a man who isn't suitable at all to local leaders. The situation is bad, very bad."

Asked who he was going to vote for this year, Seawell had only one comment: "Well," he said, "the Republican Party obviously doesn't want me, or others who believe in the old Taft policies. I'm going to find me a new home. . . the Democrats have the only one left. You figure it from there."

While that was not a flat statement that the ex-Republican leader would vote the Democratic ticket, it left little to the imagination.

He said he was not actively working for any candidate at the present time, and had made no plans to do so. He suggested, however, that voters interested in a "two-party system," which he termed indispensable to good government, make their wishes known.

COUNCIL

"The design as approved permits two beautiful courtyards which will preserve a maximum of trees and shrubs, an effort that would not be possible with other architectural styles. The Council believes these courtyards will be among the loveliest assets of the entire Town.

"The design fits attractively into the Town park block, preserving a maximum of space for recreation.

Colonial Considered "Colonial design was considered most seriously and not accepted only after it became apparent that the cost of such design would easily add 25-50 percent to the cost of the building. In addition, colonial design was not flexible enough to permit efficient layout of Town departments, a fact substantiated by a 300 mile trip made by the Council to inspect the most modern colonial municipal building in the South."

Reached at his office this morning Hayes said it was difficult to say when the building would actually be under construction.

"We have had countless meetings with the Council regarding the design and have been held up for that reason," he said. "We have, however, started the final drawings, something we could not do while the building design was under consideration. Perhaps the actual construction will be started soon after the first of the year."

"Structural and mechanical engineers have also been held up and their final drawings are not ready at present."

Hayes also pointed out that the law requires at least a month of advertising for bids, more time that will be needed before construction begins.

The building will be located on the same site as the old town hall in the town park.

Looked Over Other Buildings Prior to deciding on the plan finally chosen for the new Southern Pines building, several members of the town council inspected other municipal buildings in neighboring towns, with the principal purpose of deciding what style of architecture to adopt.

Among buildings visited was a new town hall in Camden, South Carolina, of Southern Colonial architecture. Recently completed, the building, of steel and masonry construction, plastered within and with terrazzo and tile flooring, was erected at a cost of slightly under $11.50 a square foot.

The Camden building includes the same facilities with a few additions, which will be in the new building here, on a slightly larger scale in view of the comparative size of the two towns.

CHIEF NEWTON

(Continued from page 1) said, "If it hadn't been for Chief Newton I couldn't have saved my boy. He seemed to understand him when I did not—he could talk to him." Businessmen told of how Chief has quietly hunted jobs for youngsters whose idle hands were getting them into mischief. This is true of white and Negro alike.

Charles Edwin Newton was born in Southern Pines, the descendant of original Scottish pioneers on his mother's side, while of New England heritage on the other. His father, the late Scott Rockwood Newton, came from New Hampshire. His mother, the former Catherine Shaw, is the daughter of "Squire" Charles Washington Shaw, former owner of Shaws Ridge which formed the site of Southern Pines. "Squire" Shaw was the first mayor of Southern Pines. Mrs. Newton, mother of the Chief, was born in the Shaw House, now restored by the Moore County Historical Association as a typical quaint pioneer home of the early 1800's.

He is married to the former Cartie Corinna Hussey of Robbins, and they have five children, James Edwin, Greensboro; John Scott, Southern Pines; Catherine (Mrs. C. D. Smith), West Hartford, Conn.; Lucille (Mrs. Roland Jager), Fort Sill, Okla.; and Richard, a student at the University of Alabama.

He is a Southern Pines High School graduate.

As Chief in a resort comprising many divergent elements, from the very wealthy on down to the extremely underprivileged, Newton has unusual problems which he has handled with a minimum of complaints. (It is too much to expect of any police officer that there should be none at all, and would probably be a sign he wasn't doing his job!)

Since becoming Chief he has kept a continually open mind on improvements to meet the changing times, pushing expansion and modernizing of the department whenever consonant with the frugality imposed by municipal finances.

During the past decade the department has grown from a four-man force with minimum equipment to a department of seven officers, also a desk force of three persons on eight-hour shifts, to provide 24-hour, seven-day-a-week service. Additions of the past few years have been the patrol car and excellent two-way radio equipment. Because of a limited budget he has in most cases taken green hands as "rookies" on the force, and trained them himself to become policemen.

He has himself taken special training at the Institute of Government, and is also trained in first aid and fire fighting. These specialties he passes on to his men with cooperation of the fire department.

In 1948, and again two or three years ago, he called in the FBI to provide the department with the most modern available record-keeping procedures and equipment. All records are complete and up to date at all times.

The Pilot is proud to honor Chief Newton on the occasion of his Silver Anniversary with the force, and as he starts on his second quarter century with the force, is sure that it is expressing the views of the majority of local citizens in saying, "Thanks, Chief, for a good job well done."
