National Guard Recruit Drive Underway Here

Public Invited To Open House Feb. 24. Also Event Feb. 17

Recent changes in military procurement policies have added emphasis to the recruiting campaign underway in the local unit of the National Guard.
Capt. William J. Wilson, commanding Company D, 130th Tank Battalion, located in Southern Pines, said this week that his unit is opening its regular recruiting drive, which is to be pointed toward the annual Muster Day, held during the week of Washington's Birthday.
The main object of the current drive is to acquaint young men and their parents with the various military obligations facing today's high school graduate. As Captain Wilson explained, a new policy, effective April 1, will require every new recruit in the National Guard to perform six months active duty for training before starting his tour of duty in the National Guard. Under present regulations, young men enlisting in the Guard undergo only the usual part-time Guard training.

The current recruiting drive will feature talks to local schools and civic organizations, an "open house" at the Southern Pines Guard headquarters on February 24, and an invitation to all interested persons to visit and observe the regularly scheduled training on Sunday, February 17.
"Every boy, as he reaches his 17th birthday, finds himself faced with an obligation to serve his country in the armed forces," said Wilson. "We feel that the National Guard offers the best practical answer to the problem of a military obligation, by allowing each young man the chance to serve his country at home, with a minimum of interruption of his schooling and civilian job."

Young men interested in the National Guard are asked to call Southern Pines 2-3681 for further information.
