

IN 'FRIENDLY ARGUMENT'

Town Employee Gets Three Months Sentence For Knifing Co-Worker

James J. Leggett, employed by the town of Southern Pines in the street department, was sentenced to three months on the roads in Recorder's Court Monday for knifing one of his co-workers and best friends after engaging in a "friendly argument."

Leggett, who had been arrested late in the afternoon of February 24 for cutting James Lee Holt, said after being sentenced Monday that he "still wasn't mad . . . never had been."

Officers Wright and Seawell, who made the arrest, said Leggett and Holt had been together all that day and had been drinking. Holt, Leggett charged, had called him a name during the course of conversation and he had become angry.

Charged with assault with a deadly weapon, Leggett had been given a preliminary hearing and was released on $500 bond for his appearance in court Monday. It was the third time he had been charged with assaulting another person.

Town officials said they were quite surprised at Leggett's actions; he is an excellent worker and "extremely friendly."
