BUT HE WON'T WRITE IT

Book On South Could Be The "Big One," Marquand Says In Charlotte

John P. Marquand, wintering in Pinehurst, told the Pilot several weeks ago he would not write any more "Mr. Moto" stories. This weekend, in Charlotte, he said he would finish a novel he is presently working on and would write no more at all.

"It will be either the fourth or fifth time I've retired," he told a meeting of Harvard alumni.

Marquand, who won the Pulitzer award in 1937 for his novel, "The Late George Apley," said in his opinion the most promising of the young novelists today are

Edwin O'Connor, author of "The Last Hurrah," and James Jones, who wrote "From Here to Eternity."

He also repeated some advice he had earlier given a Pilot reporter: "The best opportunity for a triumph in the novel-writing field is a work which would concern itself with the development of this new and vigorous South. But it would have to be done by one who has lived it and seen it all."

Marquand, who introduced President Nathan Pusey of Harvard to the alumni meeting, is working on a novel about a playwright and his marital difficulties.

During the week of March 2, North Carolina broiler producers received an average of 18 3/4 cents per pound, compared with 21 cents the same week a year ago.

Dogs To Be Given New Three-Year Type Vaccine Here

For the first time this year, dogs in Moore County will receive rabies shots that provide immunity for three years rather than the usual one.

The County Commissioners voted for the new method, already proven successful in several other counties in the state, earlier this week.

Dr. C. C. McLean, veterinarian, said the new vaccine is much more efficient than the old type. "It has relatively no ill effects on dogs, though small dogs sometimes have a sore leg for 24 hours after the vaccination," he said. "The vaccine has been tried and found successful in various areas of the state for several years now," he added, "and is more effective than the old type."

The new vaccine is given in the thigh muscle, rather than in the neck as formerly. If the vaccine is given to a dog under six months of age, that dog must be vaccinated again the following year.

Owners of dogs receiving the 1957 vaccinations will be given a blue tag and a certificate. The tag is so constructed that it can be riveted to the dog's collar, a procedure the dog warden, Hardy Barber, recommends.

"A tag like the old ones, the type that hangs from the collar, probably will not last three years," he said.

The vaccination program will continue on an annual basis so that newly acquired dogs can be vaccinated each year. And, though the new vaccine is more costly than the old type, the price on public clinics will remain the same, one dollar per year. Privately administered, however, the price will be two dollars.

Every dog in the county is required to have two tags—one a county license showing the dog has been listed for taxes, which is given at the time the dog is listed, and the rabies tag. Dogs over four months of age are required to be vaccinated.

Dog owners have been urged to have the new blue tags riveted to the dog's collar so that proof of his vaccination is apparent if the dog is picked up by the dog warden.

A complete schedule of vaccination clinics was published in The Pilot last week.
