FROM ONE-THIRD TO ONE-FIFTH

Legislation To Reduce Town Share Of Right-of-Way Costs Applauded

Southern Pines, along with every other town in North Carolina, may have the strain on its treasury eased a bit if legislation presently in the General Assembly is adopted.

A bill which would reduce from one-third to 20 per cent the amount municipalities are required to pay on rights-of-way costs for new highways crossing their boundaries was reported out of a Senate Roads subcommittee yesterday.

The bill had its origin in Kill Devil Hills, a tiny municipality on North Carolina's Outer Banks. The town, which stretches from the sound to the ocean, is about five miles long. A new road is presently going through the town and officials there have claimed the right-of-way costs would be completely out of proportion to the amount of money it was capable of paying.

The legislator from Dare County, where Kill Devil Hills is located, is Bruce Etheridge, one-of the most respected representatives in the house. His proposal to reduce the right-of-way share a town must fork over has received much favorable comment in the House.

Town officials of Southern Pines also think it a good proposal. With a new thruway going through town and completion expected this summer, town officials said that lowering the town's share of the right-of-way costs would "be a tremendous savings." It would mean, they pointed out, sharing only one-fifth of the costs as against one-third.

HI-Y PROJECT

A new project, aimed at encouraging every student in the local high school to attend church this Sunday, and every Sunday throughout the year, was started this week by members of the Hi-Y Club at the school.
