Governor Seeks Heaviest Turkey For Show Entry

Governor Terry Sanford talked turkey yesterday. He asked Tar Heel farmers to help him find the fattest and fanciest turkey in North Carolina. The heavyweight champion turkey will strut North Carolina's colors in the National Turkey Show in Louisville, Ky., January 6-10.

Governor Sanford issued the invitation to Tar Heel turkey growers after accepting a challenge from former Governor Bert Combs of Kentucky to enter a Tar Heel turkey in the national competition.

Noting that North Carolina farmers had raised 2,737,000 turkeys this year, Governor Sanford said:

"We know that Tar Heel turkeys are the tastiest in the nation."

"We also know that they gobble as fine a tune as turkeys anywhere."

"And we suspect that they will weigh in with the best in the country."

The Governor pointed out that North Carolina ranks 12th in the nation in total turkey production. State and federal agricultural records show the 1963 turkey production is up about 17 per cent.

The Governor asked turkey growers to write the vital statistics of their nominations to Wade Lucas, public information officer, State Department of Conservation and Development, Raleigh. The written nominations should include: Weight, breed, sex and age of turkey.

Arrangements will be made to send the champion to Louisville.

plan was made recently by John Baker, Route 1, Cameron, who plans to renovate all of his pasture, using coastal bermuda grass on his sandy upland fields with a strip of Bahia grass between the bermuda and the cropland. The fields in the creek bottom will go to fescue and ladino clover.

Luther McPherson, Route 1, Cameron, also made a conservation plan, the key feature of which is the establishment of grass in crop rotation followed two years later with a grass waterway in a natural depression which will serve as the outlet for two parallel terraces.

One of the key purposes of a farm conservation plan is to organize farming operations in a systematic manner, "one step at a time," as indicated by the McPherson plan.
