Carthage Couple Mark 50th Wedding Anniversary

Dr. and Mrs. Colin G. Spencer were honored Sunday, December 29, at an open house at their home given by their children on their Golden Wedding Anniversary.

Several hundred guests from Carthage, where they have lived for 48 years, from Moore and neighboring counties and distant parts of the State came to congratulate them and share in the beautiful party.

Their home on Elm Street, filled with antiques they have collected in years of travelling through most of the United States, was gay with flower arrangements in golden and yellow colors. The front door bore a double wedding ring design of gilded wreaths, with Christmas mistletoe.

A four-tiered cake in white and gold, with yellow icing roses, centered the dining table covered with old lace, with punch bowl and candelabra of antique wrought silver. The candelabra held yellow carnations and golden candles.

Greeting guests at the door were Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Poole, while Mr. and Mrs. Joe Allen presented them to the first receiving line, composed of Dr. and Mrs. Spencer. Showing them into the dining room were Mrs. Jack Lane and Mrs. Lena Ladu.

Mrs. John Neely of Asheboro and later Mrs. M. J. McPhail served punch, while Mrs. Charles T. Grier cut the cake, which was served by the Spencers' granddaughters Lamar, Betsy and Carol Deahl. Nuts, mints and candies were served.

In the den, the visitors were then presented by Mr. and Mrs. John M. Currie to the second receiving line, composed of the honor couple's children—their daughter Mary (Mrs. George Griffith) of Portland, Ore.; daughter Elizabeth Ann with her husband U. S. Deahl, Jr., of Winnetka, Ill.; daughter Lamar with her husband Stuart Verch, of Charlotte; Mr. and Mrs. John Spencer of Winston-Salem and Mr. and Mrs. Colin G. Spencer Jr. of Carthage.

Just one son-in-law, George Griffith of Portland, Ore., could not come, staying home with the three little Griffiths, too young to travel so far. All the rest of the 16 grandchildren were present.

Assisting in serving the cake and punch, nuts and mints were friends and grandchildren of the couple.

DR. AND MRS. COLIN G. SPENCER

Beaming with happiness, Dr. Spencer, an outdoorsman all his life, was the picture of health and joy, while his wife, slim and charming in her mist-blue lace gown over blue satin, with orchid, looked as pretty as she must have as a bride.

She was a Florida girl, whom Colin Spencer, born at Asheboro, met while at State College, through a friend who went to Florida to work in a bank in which her father had an interest. Lena Fowler was her name, but soon after Colin's graduation from N. C. State in June, he made plans to change it to Spencer.

June 1914 was the date they set, but when he went to her home town of Apalachicola for Christmas 1913, they decided not to wait, and were married at her home within the week.

An agriculture major with chief interest in forestry (but the State College Forestry School had not then been established) Colin had gone to work managing an estate owned by J. E. Latham of Greensboro, in Alamance county. After a train trip with leisurely stop-over at Atlanta, they arrived at the estate, where friends had arranged a grand flourish train would stop right in front of their new home. They laugh as they recall how the bright sunny Florida stepped out of the first snowdrift she'd seen, three feet deep.

Many more new experiences and adventures awaited her she has shared all her husband's interests and these have carried him far and wide to heights of distinction and success.

After the first year in Alamance county, they lived for a year at Cramerton, then moved to Carthage, where his father, Aaron Addison Spencer, founded a lumber business. Here were Colin's first love, a time went on he bought his own land and began buying land to grow his own. His conservation practices and successful experiments brought him to the attention of forestry leaders of the State and also its large timberland owners, who began to look to him for advice. Today, after tiring five years ago from the lumber business, which he had passed on to his son, Colin, Jr., a nationally known forestry consultant, and has made original contributions to
