D. D. Armstrong Dies; Was Grocery Deliveryman Here

David Daniel Armstrong, 53, died Tuesday morning at Moore Memorial Hospital, where he had been a patient for about three weeks.

Funeral services will be held Friday, April 3, at 2 p. m. at St. Joseph A.M.E. Zion Church, Aberdeen, with burial following in the Berkeley section of Aberdeen. The body will be at the Baptist Church in Taylortown from 11 a. m. to 12:30 Friday.

Armstrong, who was known in the community as "Ned," was born in Troy, N. C., but lived for most of his early life in West Virginia, where his father was a coal miner.

During his teens, the family moved back here, to Aberdeen, where his mother, Mrs. Sallie Dawkins, still lives.

Ned went to work in 1938 as deliveryman for Henry W. Dorn, who then owned the grocery store (formerly General Store) in Pinehurst.

When the store was purchased by James D. Hobbs of Southern Pines, Ned stayed on, working for over 18 years for Hobbs, who said of him this week, "He was an honorable man and took a great pride in his work. No one can ever take his place as an individual."

When Hobbs sold his grocery business last summer to C. L. Worsham, Jr. of Southern Pines, Ned continued as deliveryman with the new owner, serving, though critically ill, up until the date he entered the hospital.

Survivors, in addition to his mother, are his wife, Mrs. Augusta Spruell Armstrong; two daughters, Nancy Lee Armstrong of the home and Mrs. Myrtle Smith of Bridgeport, Conn.; and two brothers, Landon of Charleston, W. Va., and Charles of Pinehurst.
