Agriculture-Business Course Given At Lee Center Offers Opportunities

The two year agricultural technology business course offered by the Lee County Industrial Education Center at Sanford, is designed to give the student a thorough understanding of business principles and procedures as they relate to agricultural products, services and supplies.

An advisory committee from production agriculture, education, and business helped to set up the curriculum in order that the student would have a broad coverage in subject matter and be qualified to enter a number of different types of business organizations. The course is well balanced with study in human behavior, business techniques and basic agriculture procedures.

In classrooms, containing business machines, the student becomes familiar with procedures in accounting, record keeping and budget making. In laboratory facilities, including a greenhouse, the student learns agriculture as it is being practiced today. Through selected field trips, modern agriculture and businesses are viewed by the student. Some time is spent actually working in these areas. With the trend to more automation all businesses are seeking men and women who have skills acquired in study beyond the high school. For those who want inside work, the chain stores offer employment in such areas as produce department, dairy and egg section and meat market managers. Farm, seed, fertilizer and supply stores need young men who are willing to assume managerial responsibilities.

Large farm operators are seeking farm managers and herdsmen. Agricultural credit and financial concerns are seeking persons who are qualified as servicing agents for loans, appraisals sales, servicing, processing and credit reports. Positions in marketing agricultural products are readily available to those persons who qualify.

North Carolina has the capabilities for feeding a large part of the eastern half of the United States. This is due partly to its location (within one-day trucking distance of more than 90 million people). The climate in the Tar-Heel State is ideally suited for truck and field crops. However, agriculture is more than just farming. The trend is for less people to be involved in the actual raising of farm products (often referred to as production agriculture) with more trained and skilled workers required in the handling, processing, sales, and distribution of the farm products.

Under the direction of W. A. Martin, president of the Lee County Industrial Education Center, two well qualified instructors administer the agriculture program. Hubert Garner serves as chairman of the Agriculture Division and is a former teacher of vocational agriculture. He finished Mars Hill Junior College and then attended Clemson University from which he
