Apples, Rice Head Extension Service's 'Plentiful Foods' Listing For October

Apples and rice are the featured items on the plentiful food list for the harvest month of October. Also included are beef, cheese and turkeys—all versatile and popular protein foods.

Miss Gaynelle Hogan, Extension consumer marketing economist at N. C. State, Raleigh, says this season's bumper apple crop is the largest since 1937. Around 147 million bushels are expected this year. Shoppers everywhere can look forward to good selections of high quality apples at favorable retail prices.

October is Rice Festival Month and rightly so, for economists expect a record harvest of rice this year—73 million hundredweight. There will be plenty of all kinds of rice, particularly the medium and long grain varieties. Mouths of hot rice make the perfect accompaniment for Oriental dishes. Then use any rice that may be left over for a delectable skillet of fried rice the next day, Miss Hogan suggests.

Shoppers can expect to find plenty of turkeys at reasonable prices. Production is up about seven per cent over last year. Roast turkey stuffed with an apple-rice dressing needs only a vegetable and perhaps a salad course. Plan to have turkey left during the week. Or freeze some good-size portions of meat for meals weeks later, says the economist.

October also is Cheese Festival Month, during which a great many varieties of cheese will be plentiful. At most any meal of the day—for appetizer, a main course, or dessert—cheese is definitely in order, Miss Hogan notes.

Beef supplies are expected to continue plentiful through October. For hearty fall appetites serve beef stew with plenty of vegetables and dumplings or baking powder biscuits. Hamburgers will be popular during football weather—for both pre-and post-game refreshments.
