TEERING OFF * WITH deNISSOFF

When I was in my early teens, I once remarked in front of several members of my family, that I wished Eddie Cantor was my father.

Hoots of laughter greeted this expressed wish—who wants a pop-eyed clown as a father? Besides, weren't his five girls enough for him?

Remembrance of this remark is prompted, of course, by the death this week of the energetic little man who began his rags to riches career as a singing waiter, advanced to shows at the Winter Garden, and wound up one of the brightest stars of his time in the Hollywood firmament.

Tempering his admiration for Cantor with the admonition that "he cannot and should not try—the blackface song and comedy of his master, Jolson..." Gilbert Seldes in his book "The Seven Lively Arts," admits that "of the straight Winter Garden shows, the 1922 with Eddie Cantor was the best in ten years, made so by Cantor and made by him, in spite of the billing, into a one man show."

Seldes cites his "nervous energy," his "terrific rushes from the wings."

"He sings well," notes Seldes, "and his three broken dance steps with the sawing motion of his gloved hands create an image exceedingly precise and palpable."

GS completes his word portrait of the then young comedian by suggesting that so far, he has failed to develop his own sources of strength.

Through the years, Eddie apparently developed his sources of strength, if not as a comedian, certainly as a humanist. His devotion as a father, while poking gentle fun at himself for his failure to produce a son, and to his wife, Ida, was surely the foundation of his devotion to larger causes.

His contributions to charity, in talent, time and money, are well known by those who followed his career, one of the finest of these philanthropic ventures, perhaps, was his promotion of the Fresh Air Camps for underprivileged youngsters from Manhattan.

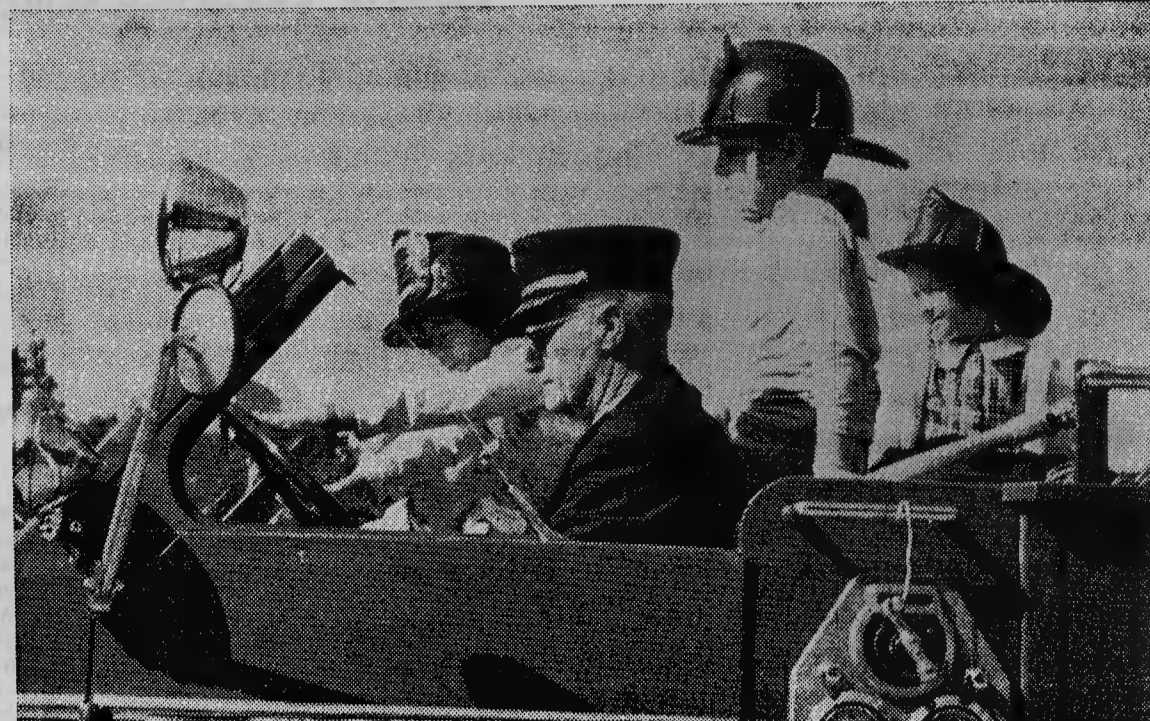

His humanity was warmly felt, and since his retirement from "show business" some years ago, I, and I'm sure others, have missed his weekly radio shows which absolutely pulsed with the sometimes schmaltzy personality of the real and vital person that he was.

School Merger Plans With Sou. Pines Discussed At Pinehurst PTA Meeting

Opinions, both for and against the proposal by L. Boyd Creath, Pinehurst school merger, were aired during a 40-minute question and answer period, following an up-to-date exposition of the proposal by L. Boyd Creath, chairman of the Pinehurst Board of Education, and other board members. Tuesday night at the Pinehurst Parent-Teacher Association meeting.

Main purpose of the discussion was to acquaint parents of children attending the Pinehurst School with the merger plans as they were outlined at a joint meeting of Pinehurst and Southern Pines patrons, held in August at the National Guard Armory.

Many of the local parents attending Tuesday's meeting, held in the School Auditorium, indicated by raising their hands that they had also been present at the August meeting.

Dr. J. C. Grier, Jr. presented Mr. Creath and other school board members A. H. Garrison, Jr., Herbert Ehrhardt, Jr., J. W. Sheffield and Melvin Wicker.

At the conclusion of the meeting Tuesday, parents and teachers present expressed their appreciation to the school board for their complete and interesting presentation of the facts.

Mrs. Thomas Connolly, PTA president, presiding, told members that the executive committee had appointed committee heads for the year. Mimeographed sheets containing the names of the appointees were given out at the beginning of the meeting. The budget for the year, including payment of free lunches, purchase of an encyclopedia for an elementary classroom, expenditures for visual aids, and other expenditures, was explained by Mrs. Connolly and approved by the members.

Approximately 200 persons have already joined the PTA during this month's membership drive, reported Mrs. Floyd Medlin. More are expected to become members before the drive ends next week. Mrs. Leonard Whitesell urged parents to subscribe to the National PTA Magazine.

The ham and bean supper, only fund-raising project for the Parent-Teacher Association for the year, will be held, as usual, in November, said Mrs. John L. McKenzie, who stated that the date would be decided upon and announced later.

The school grounds, reported Mrs. Lanie Garner, are in excellent condition, with grass planted throughout. Plans are to place a low fence near the gymnasium which, it is thought, will improve the appearance of the grounds there.

The Pinehurst School cafeteria received a top sanitary rating of 95 per cent, according to Mrs. L. F. Garvin, manager, who stated that the cafeteria is operating satisfactorily.
