LOCAL MAN EXTOLS 'CHIEF'

Working With Hoover Recalled By Redfern

Gilbert Redfern, retired UN official, of 775 South Ridge St., has paid homage to the late Herbert Hoover, with whom he worked in relief operations of two-world wars.

As a former member of the American Relief Administration headed by Hoover after World War I, Mr. Redfern attended meetings of ARA "alumni" held in New York City from time to time up until two years ago, when the health of their "Chief" began to fail.

Asked for personal recollections of the 31st U. S. President, who died Tuesday of last week at the age of 90, Mr. Redfern responded, "His greatest characteristics were his modesty and strong feelings of compassion for people genuinely in need."

For Other People

"He was a great administrator and a man who worked very hard but never for himself—always for other people. Though he became President, Hoover was added Mr. Redfern, "in a way a political freak. He never sought honors or advancement for himself. These came to him as a result of what he did and what he was."

The local man was associated with Hoover first in the Belgian Relief of World War I, which broadened into the government-financed ARA, accomplishing the near-impossible in the transportation of food, and the saving of literally millions of lives in war-torn countries.

'He Saved My Life'

After working with the State Department during the 1930's, Mr. Redfern again became associated with Hoover in the early years of World War II, when the former President headed a similar though smaller, relief organization in Poland, Russia and the Baltic States.

This was a privately financed operation, arranged by Hoover, who set up his own staff to provide food and other necessities for victims of the German onslaught, before the Iron Curtain was drawn.

A typical incident of that time stands out in Mr. Redfern's memory. "A refined and lovely lady came into our kitchen at Vilna, where we had a feeding operation, and said she personally wanted to express her thanks to Mr. Hoover. 'He saved my life when I was a child in Warsaw, 20 years ago, and now he is saving the lives of my daughters,' she said."

Inner Circle

The ARA staff, originally numbering some 300 people, "greatly dwindled" through the years, but continued as members of an inner circle held together by their great love and respect for their former leader. On the list are such names as Christian Herter, Louis Straus, former U. S. Senator Alexander Smith of New Jersey; Maurice Pate, founder of the Children's Fund and now head of UNICEF, and Hoover's former "right-hand man," the late Hugh Gibson, one-time ambassador to Belgium.

Their meetings, of late years have been held at the Harvard Club in New York City and, though it was never announced in advance that Hoover would attend, he usually came. The members loyally guarded the privacy of "the Chief" and valued the intimacy which it engendered, in which the former President relaxed as much as his great personal dignity would allow.

Sense of Humor

Here his sense of humor would show and Mr. Redfern recalls one "quip," made in discussion of a political speech of a member of his own party—"I am much less interested in what a man says than in knowing who wrote his speech for him!"

Besides many personal recollections, the local man has an autographed photo of "The Chief" as a reminder of those history-making years. The relationship of the ARA "alumni" with their leader was always one of the deepest respect and mutual confidence, as it had been during the days when together they had worked in the greatest wartime relief operation known to history.

"When he told us what to do," Mr. Redfern recalls, "we did it without question because we knew it was right. We appreciated his friendship and we asked no favors because of it. We will miss him a great deal."
