Shakespearean Episodes To Be Seen By Students

Students of high schools in Moore County will have the opportunity on Monday to see performances of Shakespeare by a professional New York company specializing in educational theatre.

The Theatre - In - Education, now in its third year in North Carolina schools, will perform at Pinehurst at 9:30 am and at Union Pines at 1:30 pm. Students from schools over the county will attend one or the other of the performances, as designated.

Theatre-In-Education's "Shakespeare Scene by Scene" will present episodes in Julius Caesar and Twelfth Night, played by five experienced New York actors, Anne Gee Byrd, David Byrd, Chet London, Jay Robinson and Thea Ruth. Lynn Ely, producer and founder of Theatre-In-Education, currently celebrating its tenth anniversary, is particularly proud of this season's company. Ernestine Perrie has staged the production and Marchette Chute has written the introduction and bridging narrative. The actors and actresses all have had experience in Broadway, off-Broadway film productions.

This experiment in educational theater is sponsored by the North Carolina State Board of Education. It is available to schools without any cost to the individual schools or students. North Carolina is the only state to afford its public school students exactly this kind of opportunity; it is the only state subsidizing such projects in educational theater.

Hal Hassenfelt then got two quick baskets to put the game on ice.
