Morehead and Local Issues.

Mr. Morehead, the man who thinks he thinks he is chairman of the republican state executive committee and Mr. Grissom, who is Mr. Morehead's secretary have recently let themselves be interviewed on the subject of the Maine election. Most republicans exhibit symptoms of the jim-jams when the Maine election is mentioned and at once begin to shy. Mr. Morehead and his private secretary, however, each tackle the question in their own several ways and both of them make a mess of it. We a deaf ear to the needy and was al- though the crop is very short, but don't know whether it was jim-jams the in their case or what, but any way Mr. Grissom could see nothing but "licker" in it. There will be no trouble this year about the people turning out to hear our speakers-the trouble is our speakers and our democratic literature are in such demand that Mr. Eller is unable to supply the demand. Our party has been wanting a little exercise ever since 1900 and on this decennial year they are having a good time with the same old crowd they licked then.

But whatever the question in Maine Mr. Morehead should remembern ay he will not be allowed to forget that there is a local question in North Carolina and that is Butler ism.
