BUDAPEST, A MODERN CITY.

Has Been Done to Make it a Rival of European Capitale. Ispest is composed of the towns Rival of European Capitale.

Budapest is composed of the towns of Pest, Buda and O-Buda, the three being united as one municipality by an act of Parliament in 1872. The city had a population of 360,000 in 1881, and at this time has more than 750,000. This growth in population would be a remarkable showing of it self, displaying the city as American in spirit. But what is even more suggestive of Hungarian advancement is the work done in improving the city and making it a rival of the great capitals of Europe.

and making it a rival of the great capitals of Europe.

Budapest had an ugly river-front, Sone state and splendor.

The Government removed all the old buildings, and, in reconstructing the district, demonstrated what an attractive spot a levee may be. All the streets are repayed. Many boulevards are established. New public buildings are erected, and the old ones are gone. Old private residences and stores were torn down, and new ones stand in their place. The standards made by the municipal governments were accepted by the clitizens, with the result that there is system and beauty in construction.

Our Italian Citizens. The Italian immigrant is the sub-ject of a capital special number of that excellent periodical, Charities, and the Revista Commerciale has published the results of a statistical investigation of the Italians of New York City. One is astonished to learn that there are in that city 382,775 Italians, the great majority below 45 years of age, and nearly 50,000 are being added each year. Although 48 per cent. are utterly illiterate, the fact remains that they are "most valuable additions to our population." For instance, from the investigation made 30,000 cases in the records of organized charity it was shown that in 20 per cent. of the German cases, 24 per cent. of the American cases, 25 per cent, of the English cases, and 38 per cent. of the Irish cases, the principal cause of distress was intemperance; in only 3 1-2 per cent. of the Italian cases was intemperance the cause. American city life is having a bad effeet upon them. The sudden change of diet is responsible for an increase of certain diseases. The change from the stone cottage in the open fields to the dark and unventilated tenement of Mulberry and Mott streets has re-sulted in an alarming spread of tuber culosis. Two well-known critics have recently argued that Germany is destined some day to a rude awakening. Gen. Ricciotti Garibaldi believes that the blow is to come from France. Wolf von Schierbrand maintains that the Wolf vainglorious, dissolute, overbearing, owardly Prussian junkers and soldiers of 1806 have their counterparts in the German officers of to-day. Describing the soldier of 1806 in an address to a gathering of his generals at Berlin four years ago the present em-peror said: "The glorious soldiers of Frederick the Great had fallen asleep on their laurels, ossified in the trivial. details of a senseless, antiquated drill; led by superannuated, unready and unwarlike generals; their officers no longer used to serious work and de-generated by luxury, sloth and blind self-glorification." Tale That's Told in Philadelphia.

Robert D. Carson of the Zoological Society recently made a trip to New York and greatly delights in telling an experience he had with an article which is now fortunately unknown in this city—a horse car. Mr. Carson said that he was riding along in the little dinky affair with several other passengers when suddenly the car, in crossing a switch, jolted the front wheels off the tracks. Rain was falling in an industrious manner and almost every one was feeling out of sorts. When the wheels left the tracks all the good humor left the car, and every one was angry. After considerable delay the conductor put his head

At last he said: "I will tell you, in the door and shouted .:

"Say, all youse people in de back of dis car sit still, and all youse in de front come out and help put de car on de tracks." Mr. Carson and several other men distinguished by the title of "youse people" got out in the driving rain and pushed the front wheels of the car back on the tracks." When Benjamin Franklin was on his famous mission in Paris he and Silas Deane were one cussing the numerous errors they found in the Abbe Raynal's "Histoire des Deux Indes," when the author of that work happened to come in upon them. when picked up, but the babe was lit-tle hurt. The eagle measured nine feet from tip to tip of its wings. Other feet from tip to tip of its wings. Other stories are told to a similar end, but cares to contemplate the fearful calamittes with which Wak would visit him if he failed in this duty.

Two eagles will stalk a covert in thin concert, While one conceals himself the other beats about the bushes with a great screaming, driving out its quarry for the hidden eagle to swoop down and make an end of it. An even more inside us method has been ob-served when an eagle, detecting a sheep on the edge of a precipice, screaming shillingly, and with force-ful beat of wing hurled it into the valley below, where it could devour it at its planting. it at its leisure.

There is good reason for believing, after all, the ancient legend as to the manner in which Eschylus, the Greek poet, met his death. It is said that an eagle dropped a turtle on his bald head. Pajamas for "Jackies." "I see that some wag of the Navy Department has played a joke on the newspaper men at that department," remarked a naval officer the other day referring to the report that pajama are to be substituted for nightshirt in the regulation uniform outfit of the American "jacky." "The fact of the matter," said he, "is that sailors don't wear nightshirts, never have and no such article is known to their kit. The only basis for the report was that a manufacturer of a cheap suit of paja-mas recently sent a lot of samples to the Navy Department, in the hope that their neatness and beauty would so appeal to the officials that the article might be adopted as an article of naval uniform for which the manufacturers in question would get the contract. It is now entirely optional with a sailor, just as it is with an officer, what he wears when in bed, or whether he wears anything but a blanket covering, but as I said before, the sight of a sailor in a nightshirt aboard skip would be so strange and uncanny that it might provoke mutiny.

And to think of it Pajamas for jack tars. Why, it would be more danger ous than it was to wear a plug hat in the mining towns during the haleyon ashore, like Harry Lehr, at Newport Well, it makes me tired. That's all.
