

Poultry Letter

Mr. Editor:—

I have written about a good many phases of poultry culture that is of interest to those engaged in the business, both from the utility and fancy standpoints. Of the fancy there are, perhaps, a few who would devote their time and money to the line, if there was no such thing as profit to be derived from it. But there would not be enough of that class to hold to our standard and fancy breeds. Now the truth is, if it were not for the profit to be obtained, the poultry interest never could have reached the magnitude that it has attained at the present time. It has been stated that there are greater profits made from poultry, considering the amount of money invested and labor expended, than from any other branch of business. This is no doubt true, and it is a fact that the returns are realized in a shorter time than from any other kind of live stock that the farmer keeps. Poultry is handled largely by people not engaged in farming, and for this class of men it is usually a good investment. It would seem that the farmer could raise poultry at a greater profit, because of the free range and the opportunity of economizing the waste that would otherwise occur. Very often it is true that the farmer pays less attention to his poultry than anything else on the farm, yet it seems to be profitable to him at that; how much more profitable it might be if proper care was given. I do not mean to say that success is always easy in the poultry business, for there are often trials and tribulations as in other lines of business. But with the present development and progress in the poultry business, I consider that most of the troubles need not be experienced by the careful poultry man or woman. There are many diseases that occur among poultry, about as many as trouble people, but they can be as effectually treated with ordinary care.

I have during the many years of experience, become acquainted with many of the serious ailments that the fowl flesh is heir to. During the early years of my experience, I will confess that there were times when discouragement was near at hand; but now when I look back it does not seem as serious as I thought then. In fact, I can see that if I had exercised proper care, the most of the serious trouble would not have been experienced. I will say to the beginner, go slow, go sure—that is the key to success in the poultry business.

Both boys had been rude to their mother. She put them to bed earlier than usual, and complained to their father about them. So he started up the stairway, they heard him coming.

"Here comes papa" said Harry. "I'm going to make believe I am asleep."

"I'm not," said Maurice. "I'm going to get up and put something on."—Canadian Courier.

A HOUSE PLUS INSURANCE makes a good security. No one would lend money on a house not insured. If lenders will not put their cash into an uninsured house, can you afford to?

FIRE INSURANCE MAKES GOOD the money you have invested in a home. Doubtless you have worked hard for what you have. Don't you think we had better write you a policy to-day and thus make you sure of keeping what you worked so hard to get.
