Snow In Southland

When in the Southland you see snow
And fields of purest white,
It's thus a wondrous sight
You know,
Midst cornfields sparkling bright.

The cotton, too, you see close by,
Bereft of the blossoms now,
The price per bale is e'er so high Full price you must allow.

The peanut vines you'll view
in field,
All glistening so bright
And pine trees e'er bear snowy shield,

That weighs down branches light,
Like cotton blossoms, they
'pear, too,
So puffy white are they,
Their branches drooping low fore you
While you admire always.

But soon is vanished snow so white
While frozengew drops melt.
They disappear thus in a night,
Midst icy chill that's felt,
Not long the wintry blast rages here
Where summer breezes blow,
Here's land of brightness and good cheer,
Pray, let us Southland go!
