Farm prices are low, and the boll weevil is here, but the farmer who resists them by raising most of the food for this table is not worrying about his next meal.

Plan that garden now. Write for seed catalogue and work out a well balanced system of planting.

To help with the garden extension service of the State college and department of agriculture has issued three circulars, 121, 122, and 123. You have one whether you have written it or not.

Get the cotton ground ready. Beat the boll weevil by better seed, better cultivation, and better fertilization. The early set bolls are hard to puncture.

BUILDING BETTER BODIES

RALEIGH, Jan. 22.—It is very interesting to see the awakening of mothers to their responsibility when they learn something of the great power of proper feeding in building sound bodies for their children. One mother who had attended a nutrition class, held by one of the home demonstration agents of the Agricultural Extension service said, "It makes my heart quake when I think of what I fed my children in years past."

Mrs. Jane S. McKimmon, state agent in charge of this work, states that something of the same thing must have been felt by a Brunswick county mother whose little six year old girl was suffering with malnutrition to such an extent that she had lost the power to walk. The home agent suggested that the family purchase a cow, and give the child at least a quart of milk a day. The father promised that he would get the cow and at a visit of the agent a few months later she found the little girl walking by holding the banisters and the baby boy a rosy checked, healthy looking fellow. The mother, replying to the agent's remark that they must be drinking milk, said, "Yes, and I give you the praise for the cow."

One hot dish in the rural school lunch was promoted by the home demonstration clubs in fifteen counties last year finds Mrs. McKimmon. By no means did all the rural schools do this she says, but 40 vitalized communities actually made plans, and carried them out, to serve the children hot milk, hot cocoa, or hot soup at the recess period.

At Lilesville the hot lunch was financed by the home demonstration club supplemented by things the children brought from home. Each teacher with the aid of the larger club girls prepared the hot soup for her own room. As the school room stoves were at on top this could be easily done without extra equipment. The rural children enjoyed it immensely and the town children begged to stay also. In the summer 250 suarts of soup mixture was canned by mothers and donated for winter lunches.

One teacher in Halifax county said there had been a wonderful change in the kind of food the children brought in their lunch boxes since the home agent had given demonstrations to mothers and furnished them with typed menus embracing those things found in almost any country home.
