REFLECTS ACTION OF THE SHOPMEN'S STRIKE

There is every appearance of candid analysis and logical conclusions about Senator Cuzens' statement that in sending millions to meet equipment the railroads are not moving in the right direction...

The strike looms up as, if not the principal explanation, certainly an important part of the expansion of the Southern railway territory the shopmen's strike has been forgotten by the public...

Any shopper can see plainly enough that the whole difficulty in times of traffic difficulty, is that cars are made available, and it has been generally assumed that the remedy, if only remedy, would be to buy more cars...

The conclusion is that the people are still paying for the strike, or to the refusal of a part of the route to come to terms with their men...

But indeed Senator Cuzens' complaint that the railroads, in buying more equipment, are simply making a bad matter worse, coupled with the declaration of the president of the Baltimore and Ohio that what was the matter with his road in 1920...

The fact is, the United States is the only great industrial nation in the world that hauls nearly all its freight by rail. Everywhere else, such heavy and bulky commodities as coal, lumber, sand and gravel, structural steel and building stone...

ery direction; and it may be that the railroads are the first to feel the necessity for economy that must eventually affect every industry, great and small.

If that is the case, then all the commissions, and all the schemes and all the government ownership that have been suggested will not alter the basic facts. If that is the case, the districts remote from the seaboard, the middle west—where the abundance of using less coal, iron, building materials, or getting them some other way than by rail.
