Golden Wedding Celebrated at Dardens

You've got to weep to make it home,
You've got to sit and sigh,
And watch beside a loved one's bed,
And know that Death is nigh;
An' in the stillness of the night, I see
Death's Angel come,
An' close the eyes of her that smiled,
An' leave her sweet voice dumb.
For these are scenes that grip the heart,
An' when the tears are dried,
Ye find the home is dearer than it was,
An' sanctified;
An' t'ingrit' at ye always are the pleasant memories
Of her that was an' is no more, ye can't escape from these.
Ye've got to sing and dance for years,
Ye've got to romp an' play,
An' learn to love the things ye have by usin' 'em each day;
Even the roses round the porch must blossom year by year
Afore they 'come a part of ye, an' trained 'em jes' t' run
The way they do, so's they would get the early mornin' sun;
Ye've got to love each brick an' stone from cellar up t' dome;
It takes a heap o'livin' in a house to make it home.

As we go forth from here to our new homes, let us remember the plain, simple, fundamental teachings of this dear old mother and father. I remember father telling me to always be man enough to tell the truth, and to live so as to be an honor to any community where I might dwell. And our mother, how zealously she guarded the kind of company I kept when I was a boy, saying a man is often judged by the company he keeps. I seemed hard then when I wanted to go with the gang, but how I thank her now from the bottom of my heart.

I remember these truths and teach them to our children and they in turn shall teach them to their children. Let the good that has sprang from this little home here in old North Carolina go on throughout the ages, increasing with time, and who can tell what great good may be accomplished, and how greatly humanity may be benefitted and blessed by some branch of this family. This is the kind of home from which the Lincolns, the Jacksons and the Garfields came, not from the overcrowded tenements of our great cities, where all that home means is a place to eat and sleep.

Let each one of us here resolve in our hearts, and pledge to this mother and father, grandmother and grandfather, great grandmother and great grandfather, to live the kind of lives that make the kind of homes and rear the kind of children that will make their fifty years not have been lived in vain, but crowned with glories and garlands of the greatest success and accomplishments.

At the conclusion of these remarks the speaker presented a purse of gold coin, which had been contributed by the children and grand children, in the following words:

"And now Mother and Father, in your honor, and as a slight token of the home you have made for us our love for you and appreciation and as a pledge to you that the truths you have taught us shall neither tarnish nor perish, we, your children and grand children, and friends bring to you our golden offering. May the sunset of your lives be rosiate with the glow of fond memories and shining with bright anticipation of things to be accomplished by your children and when at last you are called to answer that last great summons may you say in the language of St. Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give to me on that day." Then all joined in singing the hymn "Ere'st be the Tie that Binds."
