OUTLOOK FOR COTTON BETTER THAN LAST YEAR

Acreege Should Not Be Increased Over 10 Per Cent Expert Says

If the acreage planted to cotton in the United States is not increased over 10 per cent this season, the price outlook is favorable. This is the opinion of Dr. G. W. Forster, head of the department of agricultural economics at State College, Raleigh, who has made a study of the situation with governmental authorities at Washington in planning the farm outlook for 1928 in late January. He states that the production of 12,789,000 bales last season was relatively small crop, and while the carry-over of 7,500,000 bales is rather large, it is not excessive in view of the small crop. Consumption this year will be in excess of 15,000,000 bales, according to present indications. This will make the carry-over on July 31, 1928, amount to about 5,000,000 bales only. Dr. Forster states that an increase in acreage of 10 per cent this season with the normal yield of the past five years, will give the South a crop of about 14,000,000 bales. The foreign and domestic demand will not be materially different from last season, though better conditions are anticipated in France and Italy. He finds that thru the period from 1920 to 1926, there has been an increased demand for cotton so as to cause an increased price of about one cent a pound each year over the previous season. Farmers should keep in mind, however, that there are some areas where growers will find it hard to get a substitute crop for cotton, and this may lead to greater increases in acreage, in West Texas and Oklahoma there are still millions of acres of potential cotton land; credit is easy in most of the Cotton States and the agitation for farm relief has led to the belief that Congress may enact legislation to stabilize prices at a higher level than that which would be caused by a free play of supply and demand. This may encourage heavier plantings in some sections. Tom Tarhell says that when he is in doubt about a farming question, he follows the advice of his Agricultural Experiment Station workers and that's why he uses no other lime on his tobacco land except the dolomitic or magnesian form.

Says Irish Potato Acreage Should Not Be Increased. If the Irish potato acreage is increased this year, the prospects for a good price will go a glimmering, say statisticians of State College and the United States Department of Agriculture.
