Keep Water Transportation Free

The railroad has built many great inland cities within the past century. Yet with the rapidly rising freight rates, these same cities may be facing hardships which will cripple their growth. The government policy of permitting the railroads to make a profit by raising freight charges is going to make freights unbearable and profits without water-transportation advantages will find the freight a great item in their costs.

Water transportation points, with proper organization to prevent excessive charges, will have a decided advantage over inland places. What this country needs is a well-developed water transportation system to provide for all types of freight-carrying boats. They should be developed by the States and held by the States to always be separate, free, and independent of the railroads.

We should remember that the railroads have run all the boats except their own off of the inland waters of this country within our own recollection.

The people should speak through their legislatures and through Congress and never permit the water lines to be dominated by the railroads again.

Are We Really Charitable?

Are we really a charitable people?

Although we are almost boasters of the great things we are doing, it is doubtful if we are sacrificing as much as our ancestors did.

We are, of course, doing many fine things, but are we really making many sacrifices? It seems more like we are giving a bit from our abundance.

There has been a time when people were willing to lay aside their own work and build schools and churches and roads and other things of public need, but not so now. These things have to depend upon taxes, which cause much murmuring.

The habit of visiting a neighbor in sickness and distress has now grown into a mere formality, and if there is much real sacrifice we dodge it by being too busy, or with some other excuse.

It is also a significant fact that youth has less respect for age than in centuries past. It is doubtless because of the shallowness of the examples being set for them, which they are well able to read for themselves. We are fooling ourselves when we say what a great age this is, but we are not fooling the youngsters.

The trouble seems to be that we are depending almost solely on money for everything, rather than personal service, and nothing goes these days without money and plenty of it.

We need to study ourselves more, and as we grow in riches our charity and service should also increase.

Tobacco Companies Prosperous

A farmer produces $902 per year in value for all his services, to make no charge for his investment; that is his land, team, tools, fertilizer, and other charges.

A man who works in a tobacco factory produces $25.930 on the investment which his company has, that is, his factory.

In 1927 twenty-one tobacco factories in this State took all of the tobacco crop, hired 15,976 people and paid them $12,545,000 in wages. They paid the farmer and for fuel and power used in manufacturing the tobacco the sum of $124,712,918. The product was then worth $413,274,114. This shows that by paying out the sum of $137,257,993, they had a profit of $288,561,196; more than twice as much as all the tobacco cost them, all the labor cost them, together with the fuel and power costs.

A man who works in a tobacco factory produces 28 times as much for his company as a farmer gets for himself. A tobacco worker produces seven times as much profit for his master as a furniture laborer does for his employer.

With these facts, it is easy to understand how so many men are becoming so vastly rich in the tobacco business, while the farmers are strained to death and complaining of hard times.

We do not know what will remedy this condition, but we do know the tobacco manufacturers have a cinch, and the farmers have not.

The Gainful Occupation of Leisure

Otto H. Kahn must be right in recently saying: "Ours is a restless, purposeful, dynamic age. It is ceaselessly exploring, challenging, discovering, conquering, developing."

"At no period in history have changes been so rapid, so decisive, and so far-reaching, of such vital effect upon the ways of living, the manners and concepts of the people, as they have in the last fifty years, and more particularly in the last twenty-five in this country."

"One of the most characteristic changes, and one of the most far-reaching in its effects upon the race is the increased amount of leisure which, of late years, has come into the life of a large portion of our population, especially that of the working men. The significance of that development is accentuated by the abolishment of the saloon."

"I need not point out to a body of educators the very great importance of the use which we make of our leisure hours. Dean Inge, the famous 'gloomy dean' of England, did not exaggerate when he said recently: 'The right use of leisure is no doubt a harder problem than the right use of our working hours. The soul is dyed the color of its leisure thoughts. As a man thinketh in his heart so is he.' Apart from those lessons which we learn from our daily experience in the routine affairs of our existence and in our regular occupations, it is not too much to say that our individual development, the very contents of our lives, are largely influenced, if not determined, by the uses to which we devote that part of our time which is not absorbed by the demands of what government statisticians term 'gainful occupations.'"

"As a matter of fact, I know no occupations more 'gainful' in the truest sense of the word than those having no relation to mere monetary returns. To quote Dean Inge once more: 'Every impersonal interest has a universal quality about it. It makes life as a whole worth more to us, and opens avenues which enlarge our minds.'"

"Being given reasonably good health—and the use of our leisure hours much to do, of course, with the making or marring of our health—I doubt whether the world has ever known a time when such bountiful opportunities were available as there are now for making the life of the average man in the leading countries full and rich and interesting and stimulating, more especially in our own country."

WORRIED A LOT

Run-Down, Nervous, Appetite Gone, Lady Shows Great Improvement After Using Cardui.

Waterloo, N. C.—"I took Cardui at intervals for three years, and have been in good health since last fall," says Mrs. Noble J. Hayes, who lives near here. "My improvement after taking a course of this medicine was really remarkable. 'I am much stronger and can accomplish so much more work now. My weight increased twenty pounds, and my color is fresh and good. For a long time I had been feeling poorly. Some days I dragged around the house and had not enough energy to do my housework. 'I worried a lot about myself. I did not seem like myself, and my nerves were all on edge. I did not sleep well, and my appetite left me. 'I found Cardui to be an excellent tonic. After I had taken it a few weeks, I began to pick up and to gain in weight and strength. 'Now I am in fine health. I have recommended Cardui to many of my friends, and shall continue to do so.'"

For over 50 years, Cardui has been used with success and recommended by thousands of women for weakness and similar ailments. Try it for your troubles! At all drug stores. NC-192
