Unusual Interest Displayed In New Models of the Great Six Line

Toledo, Feb. 10.—Conspicuous among the finer group of motor cars being exhibited is the new Willys-Knight Great Six, a product of the Willys-Overland Company.

In general design, these striking models carry out the aim of the manufacturer to present a car that answers every demand of the critical buyer.

The bodies of the new Willys-Knight are characterized by a distinctive development which clearly marks a new era of motor car beauty.

The engine that powers this 1930 Great Six, with a development of 87 horsepower, is the most powerful ever built by Willys-Overland.

HAY SEEDER ON BRIDGE PLAYING

Startling Discovery Made Down at Gathercorner This Week

By A. DONT PLAY

"By gosh, here I am fifty years old and learning some'n new every day! You know, I been seeing in the papers ever-now-and then about Mrs. A. Simple, entertaining at Bridge, and just natcherly thought it was some good farmer's wife who was interested in the good roads program and was tryin' to help it on by creatin' interest in help put a bridge over a creek some town easier. But no sirre! That ain't it at all.

Thus spoke Mr. B. Reasonable to the little group gathered about the stove in the neighborhood store down at Gathercorner one night during the last cold spell.

"Well, if it ain't that, then what is it?" asked I. B. Enquirer, "who had come out that night to learn the news."

"Bless my hide," said Mr. A. Reasonable, "I learnt what entertain' at Bridge meant some Saturdays back when me and the old lady went over to town. I seen there was to be a benefit bridge on the public square of the village, and thinking I might help a little or learn better how to build bridges, (for ourn washes up every freshin, you know), I put the old woman out at the city market, parked the old Lizzie where the police would hardly tag'er, and looked at my watch to see the time of day. It was just four o'clock, the exact time for the benefit bridge on the public lawn, so I mozed down there to see and hear what I could. And my gosh! what I seen and heard still makes me dizzy. Yes, I learned what benefit bridge is shor' nough."

There were some ten or a dozen little green tables on the square, and four chairs at each table. A few winners were dartin' around here and there fixin' things to suit um, and placin' on every table a pack o' cards and pads of paper. Then the ladies began to come thick and fast, and they sorter chose partners took their places at the table and begin. But first, the lady who was giving the benefit bridge, collected a dollar for each table. They all seated themselves at the tables and one began to deal out cards for all the world like we used to do at the poker games before we got religion. And such talking and arguing and disputing over the honesty of the playing, you never heard. I was about to run off and not get to see the finish for fear someone would get shot, but then they settled the dispute and went back to dealing the cards again. I hated to leave before I learnt what the money was for, or what bridge they were going to help build, so I just kept standing there lookin' on.

About-uh-half-hour-to-sundown, they broke up, and started to give the stakes to the winner, as I thought, when some body announced that Miss Imma B. Gidby had made the highest score, and would accordingly be awarded the prize a gold cigarette case. Gosh, you could have knocked me down with a feather. Yes, sirree! she had won a cigarette case just as we used to win money playin' poker! I made shor' she be fighten mad at being given a cigarette case, but no sir, she took it and got into one of the chairs and made a nice talk, thanking the host for it, then lighting a cigarette from the case, (it was full of 'em) she stepped down."

Just as I was gettin' ready to go over and ask the leadin' woman what bridge they were helpin' build now, the old woman came along and took me by the arm, saying, "what are you doing here? We ought o' been home before now."

"No, I ain't found out what they do with the money they raise at these benefit bridges, but I found out that they don't build real bridges over streams. But they do build bridges that's likely to break in and ruin many lives."
