liquor-drinking will not look so bad. Of course, Mr. Hinsdale can not prove whether drinking causes immorality or immorality causes drinking, yet they are twin sisters, and go hand in hand, and Mr. Hinsdale would legalize liquor in order to do away with lawlessness and lewdness.

Mr. Hinsdale puts too much of the crime burden on the liquor laws. If Mr. Hinsdale will take the trouble to inquire, he will find that arrests for crime in Great Britain, Germany, and Canada, all with legalized liquor, have increased since the close of the war far more than in the United States, which has legal prohibition.

In the United States, alcoholic deaths per 100,000 of population has decreased 40 per cent, while in Canada, according to their statistics, alcoholic deaths have increased 100 per cent. Census and court reports show a decrease in the United States in alcoholic insanity, general crime from drink, drunkenness, and drinking. In Canada, according to Canadian statistics, drinking crime has increased 89 per cent, drunkenness 55 per cent, and immoral crimes in Ontario 76 per cent.

Of course, nobody denies that some people are in prison on account of violating liquor laws—and some are in for stealing automobiles. When it becomes necessary to pass a law against any particular nuisance or danger to protect the public, then some violation gets in prison. Yet the law has made life and property safer. In our savagery we had no law, no prisons. We demanded the life of our adversary. But as civilization has advanced, we have found it necessary to pass laws to protect society and make life and property more secure. None of these laws have been perfect, of course, and all of them have been disobeyed.

Mr. Hinsdale cites the prohibition law as the foundation for contempt for all laws. That is a broad charge, but the best part of it is that it is largely false. Mr. Hinsdale, a good lawyer, ought to know that the war unleashed a spirit of bigotry in the minds of the people of the world that has been too wild and rampant for man to cope with—a spirit of run wild and kick up the devil in general.

So the shrewdness of the devil came in through the money of liquor manufacturers in the United States, Great Britain, France, and Spain and wrote, "The liquor laws are the cause of all the trouble." Despairing fathers and mothers, who have been so disturbed over the new conditions prevailing, were simple enough to believe it, and some lawyers seem to have gulped it down just as it was served them.

Then again, Mr. Hinsdale says liquor laws were the cause of the kidnapping of the Lindbergh baby. Well, that is a noble guess, and a great charge—a charge the gentleman can not prove. If Mr. Hinsdale finds that racketeering is caused by the liquor laws, he will find the racketeers are liquor men and are, like him, for repeal.

Mr. Hinsdale makes one point that he can prove beyond question, and that is that many of the respectable people are aiding the liquor folks by buying their products. Of course, they can not keep their respectability if they drink bootleg whisky, and bootleg liquor will carry them into the gutter just as quickly. We admit that many people who call themselves good church folks drink and patronize the bootlegger, but more of them will patronize the legal dispensaries.

Mr. Hinsdale attempts to comfort the people of this state because we have the Turlington act which protects us, as he says, and makes us perfectly safe. This controverts every argument that Mr. Hinsdale has made. If a constitutional amendment makes lawbreakers and hypocrites of people, makes them steal babies, and causes racketeering in the United States, then the Turlington Act will do the same thing for North Carolina. And then his state's rights argument falls rotting to the ground because if we are to respect state's rights, then we must also respect county's rights. If North Carolina has no right to speak for New York, then why should Cherokee County speak for Dare County, which are further apart than North Carolina and New York.

Mr. Hinsdale seems to have been victim of propagandists, since he has used their arguments almost verbatim, and no matter how much he pleads for repeal he is doing just why a few whisky and beer barons in the United States and Europe want him to do, and they are far more dangerous and deadly than the gallberry moonshiners and the back-alley bootleggers. They will destroy more character, property and life.

Go Slow in Speculating

Don't go too far in speculation. Remember that there is not enough money in the United States to pay the interest on our public debts for one year, and don't forget that we have already overinflated our credit and it will be a long time before it will be safe to go in debt extensively.

Wisdom dictates conservatism in business as never before. We must not forget that we have not paid those old debts yet, and that they are sure to meet us face to face.

Unusual Weather

July has furnished us some unusual weather so far this year. There have been a few hot days and nights and two spells of unusually cool weather. Nights when we shiver under blankets in July are certainly out of the ordinary in this section.

Of course, somebody will rise up to try to explain it. Yet it is just like it has been all through the years—sometimes it is cold and sometimes it is hot. But after all, there is nothing quite so normal and sure as the weather, which is governed by principles and causes set in motion when the earth was formed, and nothing we can do will change one dot or tittle of the forces that God fixed by which the world should move. We call our coldest, or hottest, or wettest, or driest seasons extremes.

PROGRAM FOR FARM MEETING IS COMPLETED

Ten Farm Organizations To Cooperate in Gathering At State College

Ten different farm organizations will meet at State College during the Farm and Home Week, July 24 to 29, when the 31st annual State Farmers' and Farm Women's Convention will be held.

The convention will share its general sessions with the American Institute of Cooperation, but will hold the usual sectional meetings at which various problems affecting the rural life of the state will be discussed. General sessions will be held each evening on Riddick Field, followed by an hour of games and recreational events.

The organizations meeting with the convention and the American Institute of Cooperation are: North Carolina Dairymen's Association, North Carolina Crop Improvement Association, North Carolina Grange Lecturers, North Carolina Beekeepers Association, North Carolina Federation of Home Demonstration Clubs, North Carolina Cotton Association, Annual Extension Conference, Annual Vocational Teachers' Conference, and annual short course for farm women.

Officers of the convention this year are: L. H. McKay, Hendersonville, president; L. O. Moseley, Kinston, first vice president; George K. Sockwell, Elon College, second vice president, and C. A. Sheffield, secretary.

Officers of the State Federation of Home Demonstration Clubs are: Mrs. Dewey Bennett, Hanes, president; Mrs. Gordon Reid, Union Mills, first vice president; Mrs. Brooks Tucker, Grimesland, second vice-president; Mrs. Hubert Boney, Teachets, third vice president; Mrs. T. J. Fletcher, Rockingham, recording secretary; Mrs. J. H. Phillips, Mebane, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. T. M. Woodburn, of Parmele, treasurer.

Get Rid of Malaria!

Banish Chills and Fever!

To conquer Malaria, you must do two things: (1) Destroy the infection in the blood. (2) Build up the blood to overcome the effects and to fortify against further attack. There is one medicine that does these two things and that is Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic! The tasteless quinine in Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic destroys the malarial infection in the blood while the iron builds up the blood. Thousands of people have conquered Malaria with the aid of Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. In addition to being a noted remedy for Malaria, it is also an excellent tonic of general use. Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic is pleasant to take and contains nothing harmful. Even children like it and they can take it safely. For sale by all stores.
