Supporting the Schools

How much support—actual, self-sacrificing support—will the people at large give to the public schools this year?

Unfortunately, for a number of years people have been too busy making, or trying to make, money to pay much attention to children, throwing the burden on the teacher to drag them along the best they could. Now, since folks have turned their attention from money-grubbing, it is hoped that we will all find time to lend a helping hand to the youngsters and help them along with the problems that sometimes are hard and hold them back.

A Noble Organization

Every American citizen who cares when somebody is in need should support the Red Cross, which is the one institution that goes everywhere. It draws no color lines, and regards no religious creed, but goes to the relief of the distressed in their hours of suffering. When we have storms, floods, earthquakes, and conflagrations, we find the Red Cross on the spot with shelter, food, and clothing.

The Problem of "Repeaters"

"Repeaters cost many thousands in the schools every year.

In Williamston last year 201 grammar-grade pupils failed to pass their work without some condition, which puts pupils back, and not only costs double but is one of the most detrimental things that has to be coped with to preserve discipline and proper organization. It crowds the classes with older boys and girls, who naturally are hard to manage because they have lost interest in their classwork.

One Trouble With Business

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation wants to lend banks money at 3 per cent so they can lend it out to help business.

If the present status continues, such a course will do no good, for the bankers will not lend it. They will either hoard it or buy government bonds with it. If the Government wants to help business, it looks as if it would do better by lending the money directly to business.

While it is true that many banks have suffered by loaning money when values were declining, it now seems that they should not feel so panic-stricken and practically stop making loans altogether. The refusal of banks to make loans accounts to some extent for the present dullness in business.

Unanimity of Opinion on Tobacco Situation

Hertford County Herald. Opening prices for the 1933 tobacco crop of the bright leaf belt have produced a state of mind that is practically unanimously favorable to any sort of program that seeks to give the farmer a larger return. We can remember back yonder when warehousemen in particular fought a bitter battle against a movement to organize growers; a time when there was general division amongst all groups of the tobacco industry. The result was disaster for the attempted organization.

Today, however, there is a different sort of spirit pervading the tobacco belts. There is general agreement that something ought to be done, if humanly possible, to relieve the price situation with which growers were faced when their crop was put on sale. It is almost akin to heresy to throw a damper on the movement now under way. The individual who attempts to buck the tide is courting disaster for himself and his particular end of the tobacco business.

More Money Needed

President Roosevelt needs to add one more thing to his recovery program, and that is more money. The arteries and veins of American business are simply empty of the circulation medium that keeps business health.

The United States can well be compared to an anemic child, which has tried to keep going with nothing to nourish its body. When this country was doing only half the volume of business it is now doing, it had just as much money in circulation as it now has.

If we pay more for cotton, tobacco, wheat, and potatoes, and more for wages, we must have more money to pay with. The little money we have is too easily locked up and hidden from the channels of business. More Money, Mr. President, to cooperate with, and then your plans will succeed.

War Clouds Gathering Over State

The war clouds over the North Carolina sales tax are still threatening, and it now looks like the next North Carolina campaign will be fought out on a basis of sales tax or no sales tax.

If the anti-sales tax folks are able to organize, the greatest tax fight ever pulled off in this State will be staged in Raleigh at the session of the next legislature.

Already we see the skirmish beginning, with strong sales tax messages creeping out of Raleigh from some source not yet positively identified. Also the Honorable Pete Murphy is telling the folks how nice it is for the poor folks to pay the tax. Of course, Mr. Murphy is an experienced legislator and has much influence in the North Carolina General Assembly.

He was for horse race gambling, liquor, and for the poor man to pay a major portion of the tax in the last session.

The two warring elements are trying to build up sentiment, and somebody is going to be kept on the firing line until the next political platforms are written.

Time To Limit Great Estates

Who caused the world war is a much discussed question among some nations. Another question of just as much importance is "Who caused the world panic?"

There is little doubt but that it was those fellows we have called "the captains of industry." Comparatively speaking, it was only a few people, the great financial geniuses, who led the pace and set the traps. They sold the public all kinds of flim-flam stocks and goods of every kind, most of which had very little value. When all the surplus money in the country was gathered into the hands of this group, then the bottom fell out and the whole business structure collapsed, carrying all the small fellows down with it.

While the people have their eyes open, it is a good time for the government to limit great estates, so that in the future, no individual or combination of individuals can amass fortunes sufficient to crush and destroy fair competition.

No man can gather unto himself a great amount of wealth without taking too much toll out of the other fellow's corn, and one of the important things for Uncle Sam to look after is the size of every man's toll dish and when one gets to digging too deep into the other fellow, to cut him down.

We can have no safe and satisfactory business conditions until both sides in every deal get a fair share of the profits—or losses, as the case may be.

Farmers Hold Key

Sampson Independent. It is unfortunate that the government has had to take a hand in the matter of reducing the acreage planted to various crops, when to reduce the acreage means more money for the farmers. Yet there seems to be no other way whereby the desired reduction can be brought about.

Time and again acreage reduction campaigns have been waged by agricultural leaders and the press prior to planting time. When public meetings are held, the farmers generally will vote to reduce, but when the crop has been planted, as a rule, following such campaigns the acreage to the crop in question is increased. It has been said that the reason for this is that one farmer will figure that the others will reduce and it is a good time for him to increase. A majority seem to figure that way, judging from the results of such campaigns in the past.

Under the "New Deal" plan applying to acreage reduction, the farmers as individuals sign an agreement with the Government to reduce the acreage to the stated crops. These agreements are binding and it will be the part of folly for a farmer to try to ignore the promise to curtail the acreage. This should mean that the acreage reduction agreements now being signed for the next two years will bear fruits.

Nobody can deny the fact that one bale of cotton which sells for 16 cents the pound is worth more to the producer than two bales at 8 cents, especially when one figures the cost of cultivating, harvesting, and ginning. The same thing applies to tobacco and other crops. Know this to be true, farmers who refuse to cooperate with the plan of the Government to bring about higher prices are standing in their own light. If all the farmers will sign the acreage reduction agreements, and live up to them, then higher prices will be assured.

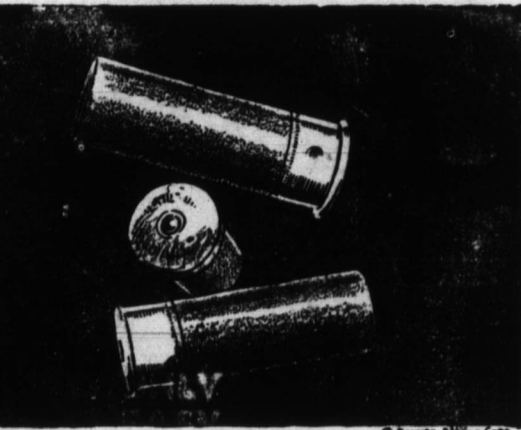

The purpose of the movement to bring about reduced acreage to the so-called "money crops" is to benefit the farmer; and surely they should gladly cooperate unitedly in the movement. The matter has been, and still is, in the hands of the farmers. If they fail to cooperate with the movement to bring about the desired relief for themselves, the blame will rest with them. We believe the farmers of this country will lend their cooperation wholeheartedly.

Cause and Cure of Crooked Breast Bones in Poultry

Crooked breast bones in pullets is caused by a lack of certain minerals and other elements in the feed and also by improper perch poles. A well-balanced mash, containing cod liver oil with both vitamin A and D will do much to correct the trouble. The use of perch poles with a flat roosting surface of 1-1/2 inches instead of the ordinary round poles will also aid in correcting the trouble. In addition to this the birds should receive oyster shell, succulent green feed, and plenty of sunshine.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving remembrance of my dear brother, Arthur Maehew Whitehurst, who departed this life September 19, 1931:

Two years have passed since that sad day When my dear brother was called away. He was always patient, loving and kind; What a beautiful memory he left behind.

Brother, dear, I miss you, since you have gone away. God relieved you of your suffering two years ago today.

Lonely is my heart without you; Sad it seems with me today, For the one I loved so dearly, Has forever passed away. No one knows the silent heartaches, Only those who have lost can tell Of the grief that is borne in silence, For the one I loved so well.

Sleep on, dear brother, and take your rest; I miss you most who loved you best; God took you home; it was His will, But in my heart you are living still.

Written by his loving sister, Mrs. OPHUS BAILEY, Williamston, N. C.
