Poor Thinking and Foolish Practices

We are by no means criticizing our government, national or state, nor our school system; yet we would like to point out one very important thing that the public has almost abandoned, and a thing far more important than many things that we are spending large sums and wasting much valuable time in doing.

We are spending huge sums to keep hundreds of thousands of young men encamped around timber woods—mostly the property of big concerns, bought cheaply—and plowing a few streaks through the woods that will count for nothing when the big fires and strong winds come. And, incidentally, did you see where 40 of these fire-fighters were burned to death over in a Western State last week, because they did not know how to handle a woods fire?

We don't object to the government spending money this way, but suppose the government would put one-tenth as much money in Boy Scouting as it is paying to these young adventurers. Is it not probable that it would do 10 times as much good?

And then we notice every little community or neighborhood can support baseball, football, and apparently everything else they want, but when it comes to finding a good honorable place to put their 12 to 16 year old boys to teach them an hour a week of the real fundamentals of service, honor, truth, and the things that will always be an asset in the development of a true life, we can neither find the funds, the time, nor the interest; although Scout training does more to modify and properly balance the life of boys than any other single activity known in the world today.

A high school will spend more on one football game than a Boy Scout troop will cost in a year, and three carloads of fellows will spend more to see one game than a Boy Scout camp will cost in a year.

The American people are apparently doing a lot of poor thinking and much foolish practicing.

No; we will not criticize. It is not popular, and we all know it is out of date to do anything that is not popular.

A Long-Delayed Task

At last the United States has started on a task that has been neglected too long. President Roosevelt has been corresponding with the head of the Russian Soviet government, and it now looks as if formal business relations will soon exist between our 125,000,000 Americans and 160,000,000 Russians.

For a number of years, we have called the Russians the dangerous "Reds," and wanted to keep our folks a long way from them, for fear they would catch the Soviet fever. However, when President Roosevelt came into office he found that the United States had better turn red too, or the whole nation would turn pale from starvation.

We are handling things just a bit differently from the way Russia did. They killed their rulers the first thing and overthrew the fellows that were strangling them—the same type as our own Wall Street fellows—and then set up a new form of government with untried and inexperienced officials; and we must admit that they have succeeded in a wonderful way. No history records more marvelous national success than that which Russia has made in a single decade.

This nation has chosen a different method. Our President took the lead in balancing things, whereby every phase of business and every type of citizenship might share equitably in a due proportion to the labor they perform so that the peasant would not have to overwork nor be underfed to exist. Nor could the millionaire multiply his millions without a service to humanity.

America is today rapidly forging forward under a system fully as socialistic as that existing in Russia, with the result that the man who works is getting more, and the financial manipulator is getting less.

Czarism in Russia hated socialism. They were wrong and their star faded from iron-handed power and privilege and the peasants rose out of pits of darkness and have been permitted to view the twinkling stars of liberty.

The only reason the United States beat Russia in reforming its government was because we had education, while Russia did not.

President Roosevelt will do one of his very best works in putting America and Russia on a basis of friendly national relations.

A Big Man Falls Down

Another proof that the so-called big men of the country are not big men was demonstrated recently, when Mr. Wiggins, the ex-president of the great Chase National Bank, was unable to do a simple problem in arithmetic for Ferdinand Pecora, Senate investigator, and missed the answer by a million.

It simply shows that what we have heretofore called our big men were those who knew very little more than how to rule Congressmen or legislators, or those who knew how to manipulate gambling schemes and extort from an unsuspecting and ignorant public their hard-earned savings.

Investigations are beginning to show that the fellows whom we regarded as the big ones and the financial leaders who knew things and were worthy of trust, were the biggest crooks, greatest grafters, and downright thieves in the country. See the results of the Morgan investigation, the Mitchell investigation, the National City and Chase National investigations, and you will find much of the cause for our present distressing dilemma.

We need to put a check on the size of salaries and the size of fortunes. When a man or a combination of men get enough, take them out of business and let somebody else come in. No man will get too much if he is honest and treats his fellowman and his country fairly.

Great wealth for one man nearly always means dire poverty for many men.

"A Good Name"

That young man Hawley, a mail carrier of Wilson, made the mistake of his life when he robbed himself of Uncle Sam's money. Trying to get rich quick was his downfall. If he had stuck strictly to his job he would have established a character that would have stood in the estimation of men and under the judgment of God. Yet, like so many others, he thought he would be able to successfully commit two grave crimes and get rich quickly, and he chose to slaughter his own character. So he now stands up before his Maker and fellow creatures a poor and a disgraced man.

It is only further proof that a good name is far better than great riches.

Woodrow Wilson Great Mistake

So far as we know, Woodrow Wilson's biggest mistake in life was in the appointment as dollar-a-year men some of the captains of business and wizards in finance, who were men with far more knowledge of how to take advantage of competitors and crush them and who no doubt used the government for securing big orders of every and all kinds of materials at exorbitant prices. If President Wilson had conscripted the factories of the wealthy to manufacture war munitions, just as the young men of the country were conscripted to go forward in the battle lines, and had kept our dollar-a-year men away from every phase of the government's affairs, he would have saved billions.

President Roosevelt will make even a larger mistake if he fails to kick the financial captains away from their old policy of dictating our financial affairs. They are more dangerous to the peace and prosperity of the nation than a pack of ravenous wolves would be the life of a suckling child.

People Haven't Changed

Charles Parker in the News and Observer. The most dubious prospects blossomed into the most successful fair in history. A pair of practical showmen have made some money for the State—and themselves—out of a proposition that State officials could think of only in terms of deficits. The showmen placed emphasis upon midway and ballyhoo. They proved that crowds big enough to make fairs profitable aren't attracted by prize boars and Aunt Mary's fruit cake. There were as many boars and cakes at their fair as others which flopped. But there were more and barer girls on the midway and in the revues, and the beforehand ballyhoo was spicier. There were more shows and less ceremonies. There were auto races and daredevil build-ups. And don't overlook the public wedding and the baby parade.

People haven't changed much, but the fair has.

The Way of the Transgressor

Beaufort News. Miss Lola Harwood, it appears, has paid back to the State with interest the money she embezzled while she was an employee of the State Highway Department. The amount was about $5,000. Miss Harwood and her father, Judge Harwood, served terms in the penitentiary as a result of this crime. The judge foolishly undertook to falsify records, got caught, and landed in prison. Yielding to the temptation to get some money that did not belong to her, this young woman ruined her own future and that of her father. Embezzlement has grown to be a popular crime in recent years. It has always been practiced more or less, but seems to be more prevalent during the past few years than ever before. Just a few days ago a man in Salisbury was charged with having embezzled a large sum of money which a wealthy woman there had willed to a church. Embezzlers steal from churches, widows, or orphans or anywhere else they can get it. They are no respecters of persons. Embezzlers are not the kind of people who shoot filling station operators and storekeepers. They are usually of a smoother, quieter type. Sometimes they move in the best social and church circles. But while they do not use violent methods, their purpose is the same as that of the strong arm gangster. They want money that does not belong to them. In the long run, though, they usually pay a high price for what they get.

Catawba Growers Selling Eggs From Cold Storage
