Songs And Plays

The songs and plays of this country have too much influence over our people. Both of them are pitched on too low a level to inspire good thinking and create

The type of plays and songs that are being produced are nearly all brought out to gather money for the producer, without specially caring what level of henesty, truth, virtue, and society humanity is found at the end of the next decade or the end of the cen-

Of course, the craze for money has caused men to destroy their neighbors far and near, and certainly it is bad to rob a man of mater il things. Yet it is of minor importance when compared to the stealing away of a man's thinking powers or his moral independence, leaving him to listen to and stare at the songs and dances of those who have no interest in building a better standard of things and are only thinking of the things they can extort from a thoughtless people. We seem to be satisfied to grope through the world a desire for righteous living.

Money Well Spent .

The Williamston post office sold $20,000 worth of money orders in the month of October. Most of it went for merchandise to mail order houses which advertise consistently and regularly.

Sears & Roebuck and Montgomery-Ward both spend millions of dollars every year for advertising, and make many millions in profits thereby. Some merchants will never advertise, and yet they still call themselves business folks.

So far as we know, there are no merchants in North Carolina who have been in business many years who have not advertised in some way, which is proof that the man who refuses to advertise his merchandise and invite people to see it has a hard time in business.

Of course, there are many ways to advertise, most of them good. Some prefer one type or plan, while other merchants prefer some other way. The vast majority who have best succeeded at the business say that they get more for their money by advertising in the home newspapers.

Cooperation_Helps Farmers

What would cotton, tobacco, and wheat be sellingfor today, if the government and the farmer had not formed a selling copartnership? No man can tell. Yet it is our honest opinion that each of the crops mentioned has been increased one-third in price by this cooperation

Heretofore, the farmer has stood alone in marketing his crop, and when he went to the market with his produce he had no say-so as to grades, prices, or weight: because the cotton exchange, the wheat-marketing gang, and the tobacco trusts had just as much power over him as a den of lions would have over one little ewe lamb, and they would devour him just as quickly

Now, farmers, remember you have the voting power-and you have justice and truth on-your side. Make new covenants with your government. Sign up all your crops and face the world and make your demands for fair play. Unless you do, you need not expect to stand up against the giants whom you have made rich and who have made you poor.

Fall in line. Sign up and save your homes and your families-to the extent of being able to make a little profit out of your investment and your labor unpleasant night of the year?

Cut Throat

Hertford County Herald.

While farmers anxiously wait for peanut cleaners and Agricultural Adjustment Administration officials to agree on a code of fair competition for marketing and cleaning raw peanuts that will assure farmers of a living price for an unusually short crop, the hearings on the code already held have shown that the complaint among farmers for the past three years that the cause of their distress could be placed at the door of the cleaners, rather than excused on the ground

Dangerous Practice

Greece would do well to look out, or she will go insolvent on Insull. In other words, if Insull robs the Greeks as badly as he did we Americans, she will go bankrupt, so she had better stand up to her treaties and send Sammy back where he can go to an American penitentiary, where he rightly belongs.

Breaking treaties to shief criminals appears to us to be a mighty bad practice.

He Dug Ditches

Baltimore Sun

Jeff Monroe, of Maryville, Mo., a digger of ditches, was buried a few days ago. The attendance at the funeral filled the church to overflowing. Two ministers officiated in the services and a long procession of citizens followed the hearse to the cemeterv.

It was a notable tribute to one who had lived a simple, kindly life, winning the respect and friendship of his neighbors and out of his scanty earnings saving something to share with those who were in want. At Christmas he became known as the town's Santa Claus, buying toys and distributing them to children who otherwise would not have believed there is a jolly old saint. He spent his life in lowly occupation, but made it a life richer in the things that bring contentment than many achieve who would view the work of a ditch-digger as a denial of all that makes living worth while.

"I sweep the crossings," said little Joe in Dickens' "Bleak House." But little Joe, in his pitiful ignorance and poverty, neither knew nor cared for anything else. This digger of ditches in Missouri showed that however lowly the tasks to which one may be forced to turn his hand, however humble the place in the great scheme, there is a way to win a full and useful life.

of over-production, has been largely a just complaint. And it is the unwillingness of the cleaners to remedy this condition, in spite of their protestations of willingness to cooperate with the farmer to improve conditions in the peanut industry, that is holding up the adoption of the code which will fix the price at a parity level and give the government supervision over the industry.

The complaint of the farmers has been that the cleaners have "taken" their peanuts at any price they wanted to give for them, without any attempt to hold the market up. The millers have taken their profit from milling the nuts, made a profit throughout the depression that has practically bankrupted the farmer by responding to every demand for lower prices, always making lower prices to the farmers that cushion for the fall.

Cut-throat competition, in which one or two of the larger companies were fighting for dominance of the market, has been largerly responsible for the low prices the farmer has received for the past three years. Through all this private war among cleaners, with all its cut-throat methods, it has been the farmers' blood that has been spilled. The farmer has paid the cost of the business war among the cleaners by suffering lower and lower prices. Every peanut farmer who has watched the course of events in the peanut industry recognizes this condition, but has been powerless to do anything about it since the entire machiery of-distribution is controlled by those big warring companies:

With both the farmer and government recognizing that this warfare among the cleaners is mainly responsible for the chaotic conditions in the industry and not the much-mouthed excuses of overproduction and surplus, it is time that the cleaners should agree to a code of fair competition that will abolish this condition. It should be done now while this crop is ready for market. If the cleaners cannot voluntarily agree among themselves to quit their cut-throat tactics that they make the farmer pay for, it is time that they should be forced to do so. Now is the time.
