

MAN IS SHOT IN LEGS RESULT OF SERIES ERRORS

Went to Work Too Early; Employer Thought He Was Burglar

(Roanoke Beacon)

Repeated robberies of his store in the Pleasant Grove community has the trigger finger of J. C. Tarkenton shot—and Charlie Bailey has the itching ability of Mr. Tarkenton to thank that he is no worse injured than he is today.

Mr. Bailey was engaged as a mechanic to repair a tractor that was at the rear of the Tarkenton store. So many business matters crowded his mind that Mr. Tarkenton forgot he had employed Mr. Bailey to begin work on the tractor early Saturday morning.

In the course of events Mr. Bailey awoke and heard the roosters crowing. Looking out he found the moon shining brightly, in fact so brightly that he thought day was dawning. So he gathered his tools and went to the tractor to begin work.

About midnight Mr. Tarkenton was awakened by the steady reports of the clanking of tools, and the first thing that he thought of was that some one was breaking into the rear of his store, as the noise came from that direction.

Grabbing his pistol, he went to the porch and yelled. No answer came but the staccato reports of some one tinkering with machinery continued, and Mr. Tarkenton interpreted this as boards being ripped from the rear of his store building.

Then the fireworks began. He fired his pistol in the direction of the tractor and the rear window of the store. Still continued the clinking noise. He fired five times. And the clinking of the metals continued.

Laying aside his pistol he reached for his shotgun. Waiting a few minutes he saw the figure of the man as he left the tractor and came into view. Taking steady aim, he emptied a load of shot into the legs of Bailey, who yelled at the top of his voice.

Recognizing the voice as that of Mr. Bailey, Mr. Tarkenton ran to his aid. It was the intention of Mr. Tarkenton to shoot low and hit the victim in the legs, which he did. This probably saved the life of Mr. Bailey.

It all came about through neither knowing the circumstances of the other. Mr. Bailey thought it was dawn- ing day, and Mr. Tarkenton in the press of matters when he had retired forgot that he had engaged Mr. Bailey for the tractor work.
