SIMON WHITAKER DIES IN HOSPITAL
Cross Roads Native Was Sufferer of Pellagra; Buried Sunday
Simon Whitaker, a native of Cross Roads Township, died in the Duke Hospital, Durham, last week of pellagra. He had been in the institution for about four weeks receiving treatment.

Mr. Whitaker, 42 years old, had lived and farmed in the Leggett's Mill section of Cross Roads Township all his life until he was removed to the Durham hospital for treatment. He leaves a widow and four children. During the past several years he lived away from his family and spent his time with his brother, C. C. Whitaker, from whose home the last rites were conducted Sunday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock by Rev. J. M. Perry. Burial was in the Leggett graveyard near the home.

PITCH FORK IN HANDS OF SON SAVES FATHER
Lad Forces Enraged Bull To Leave While Goring Stewart Woodley
Cherry—A son's skill in wielding a pitch fork saved his father, Stewart Woodley, from death by an angry bull.
The father was in his yard when suddenly attacked by the angry beast. The animal forced him to the earth and then proceeded to gore him with his stubby horns. The son, 14 years of age, was in a crib when he heard the commotion.
The lad ran to the aid of his father just in time. He acquired the pitch fork as he ran out of the door. He continually prodded and pierced the maddened beast with the sharp pointed prongs of the utensil until he was forced to leave Mr. Woodley.
An examination proved that four ribs were fractured and possibly internal injuries were suffered by the victim. His condition was so grave at the time that he was not removed to a hospital.
The boy explained that the animal was apparently bent on goring his father to death. It took him some few minutes after he started to piercing the beast with the fork before he would relent his attack. And when he did leave he did it reluctantly.
In addition to using his stubby horns, the beast had used his feet also. He had pawed up the ground about the body of Mr. Woodley and from the blood-pool and other marks it appeared that the animal was try-
