ONE WAGER THAT WAS WON — AND LOST — IN A WALK

Gilbert Coburn Picks Up $10 By 57 1-2 Minute Stroll To Everetts

(Robersonville Herald)
 Because he did not know how many minutes it was by foot from Robersonville to Everetts, Mayo Moore is not as rich by $10 now as he was early Monday. Gilbert Coburn agreed to measure the distance, guaranteeing with a $10 bill of his own that Everetts was not removed more than an hour by foot. Incidentally he won the wager in a walk—but what a walk it was.

While tobacco farmers and many others are talking in terms of new automobiles, Coburn and Moore, perchance, started talking on the subject of walking at the Atkins and Bailey warehouse here, where they are employed. The more they talked about walking the more interesting the subject became, and finally Moore bet Coburn that he (Coburn) could not walk to Everetts in one hour.

Arrangements for measuring the distance in terms of minutes and on foot were soon completed, and Coburn started walking from the corner of J. H. Roberson and Son's store down the railroad with the street crossing in Everetts as his goal. Coburn picked 'em up and laid 'em down in the heat of spirit until he reached the last up-grade stretch a short distance out of Everetts and learned by a glance at his watch that the hour was all gone but six precious minutes, and he would have gladly backed out of the wager. His spirits drooped, but his determination increased, and he crossed the line in 57 1-2 minutes, proving that Moore was not so far wrong, after all, or just $10 worth. During the hour, Moore saw to it that Coburn won the wager honestly. Driving a car, Moore used every road and pig path darting to and from the railroad to make sure that Coburn did not run a step along the way.

SMALL COTTON CROPS SELL FOR THE MOST MONEY

Value of Crop Cut In Half In 1930 and A Like Reduction in 1932

Cotton farmers have learned that excessive supplies reduce the price of the staple and that elimination of the surplus tends to raise the price. "For that reason, the cotton adjustment program was designed to eliminate the cotton surplus so that a bale of cotton could have as large a purchasing power as it had in the base period of 1910-14," says Charles A. Sheffield, assistant extension director and in charge of the Cotton Adjustment program in North Carolina. "Studies made by government economists show that for five years prior to 1929, the annual gross income from cotton and cotton-seed averaged slightly over $1,500,000,000. In 1930, it was $750,000,000. In 1931, cotton farmers sold their 17-million bale crop for $528,000,000 including the seed. The crop of 1932 brought $431,000,000. This shows how the value of the crop was first cut in half and the half further cut in half again. We know what this did to the cotton South in standards of living, ability to buy and power to pay debts."

It is known that a part of this decrease in the value of the cotton crop came with the falling prices of the period but it is also a fact that the prices were further depressed due to the mounting surplus. Mr. Sheffield points out that consumption fell below production in 1929-30 and 1,800,000 bales were added to the surplus that year. In 1930-31, consumption fell still more and 2,600,000 additional bales were added to the surplus at the close of the year. The next year, the carry-over was further increased by 4,100,000 bales. This brought the world carry-over of United States cotton on August 1, 1932, up to 13 million bales. The crop of 1932 amounted to 13 million bales which gave a supply of 26 million bales for the season.

With this large supply serving to depress the price, farmers could not hope to have their normal purchasing power. Mr. Sheffield says at the low point in 1932, it took three bales of cotton to buy what one bale had bought in the base period of 1910-14. The adjustment program was set up, therefore, to remedy such a situation.

ASK EXEMPTION OF THE SMALLER COTTON FARMER

Bailey Says Small Farmer Should Be Able To Sell Six Bales Tax Free

Raleigh.—Cotton and tobacco farmers are just as much entitled to a basic exemption from taxation as are income tax payers, who are granted a basic exemption of $1,000 by the government, according to Senator J. W. Bailey. The workings of the present Bankhead law, which imposes a tax of 4 cents a pound on all cotton raised by a farmer in excess of his allotment based on his average production per acre for the past five years, are showing it to be burdensome and unfair to the small farmers, Senator Bailey maintains. As a result, he announced here today that as soon as Congress reconvenes he will offer a bill to provide an exemption of six bales for all cotton farmers, so that the smaller farmers can have the privilege of producing that many bales without having to pay any production tax.

BIGGER DEMAND FOR POULTRY IN STATE EVIDENT

Hatcheries Are Already Booked Far Ahead, Specialist Says

The increased demand for poultry and fresh eggs over present production is leading to a conservative expansion of the poultry industry in North Carolina, according to Roy S. Dearstyne, head of the poultry department at State College. Hatcheries in the State are already booked far ahead, he said, and indications point to a favorable season for the hatchery industry. The development of hatcheries within the State leads to a balanced industry, he added, since the poultrymen utilize the superior products of the hatchery in improving their flocks and the hatcheries pay premiums for good eggs from the poultrymen. The two phases of the industry are interdependent.

As the hatching season approaches, poultrymen should start putting their brooding and housing equipment in good condition and lay plans for managing their flocks for a successful brooding season, Dearstyne said. Probably the most important factor in the success or failure of the coming year lies in the quality of baby chicks hatched or purchased, he continued. If the chicks are not of proven stock, high in vitality and descended from high producing, blood-tested parents, no amount of equipment, care in feeding or management will develop a quality flock. The production of quality chicks is expensive, he pointed out, but it is well worth the extra cost.
