Land Seekers

Many people are inquiring for land to cultivate next year. Sad to say, however, many of them are considered undesirable and can find none.

First of all, landowners usually keep the best tenants from year to year; and if good ones are moving around they are sought after.

Second, most of those who cannot be fully depended upon to work well, deal honestly, and be agreeable, always find it hard to get good places. Many of them proceed on the theory that the landowner should feed them and furnish everything the family needs and wants, and if the crop is good he "pays-out"; if it turns out bad, then the farm owner loses.

Another reason why farmers are finding it hard to get crops is that nearly every one wants a big tobacco acreage—most of which is already taken. The only farmer we know of who is looking for a crop and who does not want tobacco is a member of the Hollness church.

There was a day when almost any honest red-blooded man would buy himself a tract of land, get married and set up housekeeping and start out to make his fortune in partnership with a woman who was willing to share the joys and sorrows with him. From such homes have come most of the choice human stock of America. And men and women thought it no undue hardship to make a living. They were entirely willing and perfectly satisfied to do so.

Better Now Than Later

The proper thing for the United States, England, and Russia to do is to get together and tell Japan that she just cannot build a big navy. She might put for a little while, but that would be preferable to so much quarreling. Besides, it is so much easier to settle the thing now than it will be for our children to settle.

There would be no danger from such a general order from these three nations. Just tell them, "Japan, stop building warships. Your character and standing makes it unsafe for the other nations of the world if you carry arms." Japan will fare better by peaceful trading than she will by trying to force her own desires on others.

Secure at Sixty-Five

Southern Planter.

It is a matter of record that only 5 out of every 100 men who have reached the age of 65 have independent incomes. The other 95 per cent are dependent upon their own labor, relatives or charity for support. It does seem that in our economic system there could be developed some means whereby a man or woman who has spent the fruitful years of life in honest toil could be guaranteed financial security during the evening years of life. If a national old-age pension system is the answer to the problem, well and good, but some system is essential.

The committee on economic security which President Roosevelt appointed to develop a program of social legislation for the next Congress is working on the problem, and is understood to have evolved a tentative plan for relief of the aged. There are 28 states which have old-age pension laws already, but most of them are operating ineffectually because of poor financial support. Any satisfactory legislation must be national in scope and Federally subsidized, and it is our hope that the next Congress will enact such a law.

There are 6,500,000 people over 65 years of age in the United States, many of whom are dependent because the habit of saving was not developed in early life, or because their savings were not wisely invested.

Herein lies an equally great task for the democracy: to train our youth in thrift—make it patriotic to save—and to protect the investing public from worthless financial schemes. If followed up religiously, these two objectives would do much toward reducing the number of old-age dependents.

With financial security at 65 assured, every one would agree with Browning's phrase "the best of life is the last, for which the first was made."

Thanksgiving Day

Southern Planter.

More than 300 years ago a small group of colonial farmers situated on the New England Coast, having been blessed with a bountiful harvest, paused in humble supplication to praise God for the mercies of the year past. In so doing they little dreamed perhaps, that they were establishing a custom that was destined to live down through the years and become dear to the hearts of 123,000,000 American people.

Innately a hard working, God fearing farm people our Pilgrim Fathers saw in Thanksgiving Day much that our population should well consider today. They recognized and thanked God for those resources that were at that very moment giving birth to the richest and greatest Nation on earth. The vastness of the natural resources—fertile soils, virgin forests, wild fruits, nuts and game, including an abundant supply of our now famous Thanksgiving turkey and a wonderful climate—served to awaken in the sturdy colonists an appreciation of those things beyond their own efforts that contributed to a gracious harvest. They had come from the Old World to the New and the contrast brought them to their knees in gratitude.

Compared to our forefathers we are today living in the lap of luxury. May we not forget it! Even during the depression days, conditions here were far better than those in any other country in the world. The misery and suffering of the few unfortunate Americans have been adequately attended by a charitable people and a sympathetic government. The wheels of industry and commerce are again speeding up, and the plight of our farmers has enormously improved. Thanksgiving Day 1934 finds our people again thankful for Divine guidance.

Sure Relief for Malaria!

Don't try homemade treatments or newfangled remedies! Take that good old Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. Soon you will be yourself again, for Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic not only relieves the symptoms of Malaria, but destroys the infection itself. The tasteless quinine in Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic kills the Malarial infection in the blood while the iron it contains builds up the blood to overcome the effects of the disease and fortify against further attack. The twofold effect is absolutely necessary to the overcoming of Malaria. Besides being a dependable remedy for Malaria, Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic is also an excellent tonic of general use. Pleasant to take and absolutely harmless. Safe to give children. Get a bottle today at any store. Now two sizes—50c and $1. The $1 size contains 2 1/2 times as much as the 50c size and gives you 25% more for your money.
