Noted Authority To Speak At Farm Week

One of the nation's foremost authorities on farm life and rural population, Dr. O. E. Baker, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, will be one of the chief speakers at Farm and Home Week at State College, August 1-5.

He will appear on the joint program for men and women Wednesday and Thursday morning, said John W. Goodman, assistant director of the State College extension service and secretary of the convention.

"To rescue for human society the native values of rural life," will be the subject of Dr. Baker's address Wednesday, and the next day he will discuss, "The drive of farm youth and wealth to the cities." One of the great drains on farm wealth, he has found, is caused by rural people moving to towns and cities.

At the joint session Tuesday morning, Lynn Ramsay Edminster, of the Department of State, will discuss trade agreements with other countries so as to facilitate imports of commodities this country needs to increase United States exports of surplus agricultural and industrial products.

"Other countries cannot buy more from us unless we buy more from them," Goodman explained, "and the trade agreements that Mr. Edminster will discuss are of vital importance to Southern agriculture."

Dean I. O. Schaub, director of the extension service, has announced that, at the request of men and women who attended Farm and Home week last year, the evening programs must be kept free from speech-making and reserved for band music, group singing, and other recreation and entertainment.

An exception is being made for Thursday evening, however, at which time, Gov. and Mrs. Clyde R. Hoey will address a joint assembly of men and women in Riddick Stadium, weather permitting.

Rains Wash Soluble Nitrogen From Soil

Protracted rains this season have brought farmers concrete evidence of the risk they run when depending entirely upon soluble, inorganic sources of nitrogen in fertilizing crops at planting time, said C. B. Williams, head of the agronomy department at State College.

The pale green and yellow crops, especially in Eastern North Carolina, are suffering from a lack of nitrogen, he explained. The soluble sources of this element are easily leached out of the soil in rainy weather.

Experiments, however, have shown that where the inorganic nitrogen, which is necessary, is supplemented with organic sources such as cottonseed meal, soybean meal, fish meal, dried blood, or tankage, crops are better protected against nitrogen deficiency in wet weather. Nitrogen from organic sources does not dissolve as rapidly and will stay in the soil for a longer time than that from inorganic sources such as nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia.

Pale, sickly crops that appear to need nitrogen at this time will be helped by moderate applications of inorganic, quickly soluble nitrogen given as soon as possible, Professor Williams pointed out. Side-applications of 40 to 50 pounds of nitrogenous material that can be taken up at once by the plants should help cotton in fields where the nitrogen originally applied has leached out.

Moderate applications of 75 to 100 pounds of nitrate of soda or 60 to 70 pounds of sulphate of ammonia per acre should be given at once to corn and sweet potatoes where needed, he added. Additional applications are not necessary for tobacco, but breaking out the middles and ridging the rows will put more fertilizer in reach of the plant roots and promote better growth.

Washing Increases Value Of Irish Potatoes In N. C.

Washing commercial Irish potatoes to improve their market value is now being done in North Carolina and "hopes are that the experiment will prove successful," Harry T. Westcott, associate marketing specialist of the State Department of Agriculture, reports.

"The potato-washing experiment has been conducted extensively by Florida growers in connection with the shipment of 'Bliss' variety with the result that their potatoes have enjoyed greater consumer appeal," he said. "Many truck shipments of North Carolina washed cobbiers have been reported to arrive at receiving points in good condition and brought some premium in price."
