The Same Institution

Recognized and heralded just a few months ago by the United States Chamber of Commerce as an institution possessing God-given super powers and as an institution that could not be wrong and one the acts of which should not be questioned, right or wrong, the United States Supreme Court is now being criticised by its once staunch supporters.

The court is the same institution today that the forefathers founded more than a hundred years ago. The principles that guided the august body in the late eighteenth century, guide it today, and when those principles are advanced in solving the baffling questions the representative membership of the United States Chamber of Commerce is expected to howl.

We were told just a few short months ago that it was next to sacrilegious to even comment on the work of the supreme tribunal. It was held up as a thing far removed from the common people; it was to be worshipped as a god upon the altar before which the masses were to offer themselves as sacrifices to the decisions of the judges and without complaint. Many of those who pointed out the astounding fact a few months ago that the court could do no wrong are now attacking the court.

The Supreme Court is made up of human beings just as all others are subject to make mistakes. Probably the court has made mistakes and its members are due criticism, but it is the sincere belief of the masses that the court has awakened to the true facts after a terrible orgy surrounding the worship of property and is functioning after and in accordance with the principles laid down by the founding fathers years ago.

The personnel of the court with possible exceptions, is recognized equal to that of any court in many years. Some of them entertain conflicting views, but despite those conflicting views the court has moved forward in recent months to recognize human rights along with property rights, to weigh all the facts and open its eyes to all.

Opinions handed down may be subject to criticism, but the true court that incorporates the founding principles that make it supreme in the governmental structure deserves no such criticism as some members of the United States Chamber of Commerce heaped upon it in recent days because the court was not in direct sympathy with the organization's program. The founding fathers would not sanction the program allegedly advanced by the chamber organization, a program that is designed to cut taxes of those most able to pay, to reduce or wipe out altogether relief expenditures, to promote wild cat stock schemes, to repeal all labor laws and deny the farmers and the masses, as a whole, the right to free citizenship. And because the court does not hold companionship with such a program it is criticised by those who were just a few months ago its staunch defenders.

The Way of the Kings

Cotton, for so long a time recognized and heralded as King Cotton, is sharing the fate of other kings. Just as King Zog, King Selassie and other kings have had their thrones vacated so has cotton been cast out. The removal of the kings by the Mussolini and Hitler methods and by our modern way of living has caused no end of turmoil, and causes one to wonder if some of the problems now existent in the world could not be remedied by the return of the outcasts to their thrones.

The return of Albania and Ethiopia would certainly reflect travel in a direction of peace and away from the aggressive trend. But poor old Haile Selassie will be returning to his little kingdom just about the time American society women start restoring King Cotton to his throne by wearing cotton stockings.

Until then, ex-King Cotton will go all over the world begging recognition, leaving behind one of the biggest farm problems that a lawyer-Congress admittedly does not know how to solve.

Opportunity in the South

The field of opportunity is possibly richer in the South than anywhere in the Nation or the world today, and if certain factors can be met whereby the people of the territory can enjoy equal advantages with those in other sections, those opportunities will bloom into one of the greatest periods of prosperity ever experienced.

One of the greatest markets for lumber in the country is found right here in the South. A reliable survey not long completed shows that at least four million new homes are needed to house the population, not to mention nearly three million homes that are far below the bare standard of convenience and decency. The importance of the survey is more vividly brought to ones attention when he gets off the highway and makes a mental note of the hovels that hundreds call home right here in this county.

Yet, with this urgent need staring us in the face, the South, possibly unable to meet that need, continues to deplete its forests and send the cream of its lumber to other sections.

After paying interest homage to Wall Street directly or indirectly, after paying tribute in the form of discriminatory freight rates, and after selling low and buying high, the South possibly is doing well to drag along and make as much progress as is claimed for it.
