Proposed Cotton Bounty Seed As Aid To Japan, Germany

Would Make Product Available to Foreign Buyers At Cheaper Price

Washington — Japan and Germany, whose territorial expansion activities have been criticized sharply by the American government, are among the leading potential beneficiaries of the administration's proposal to pay a bounty on cotton, and possibly lard, sold abroad.
For years, both nations have been among the largest users of American cotton, Germany particularly before she embarked upon a "self-sufficiency" program which emphasized the production of cotton substitutes.
The cotton export subsidy program designed to help the United States reduce an unwieldy surplus and regain what officials call the nation's "fair share" of the world markets, would make the product available to foreign buyers at about $10 a bale below domestic prices. The government's loan program has been credited with having held prices of the American cotton above world levels, thereby causing a sharp loss in sales.
The extent to which Japan may benefit is shown by foreign trade reports that she took 16 per cent of American cotton exports during the 1923-33 period and 26 per cent during the first nine months of the current marketing season. Japan's purchases this season, totaling 806,000 bales, are slightly larger than those of the United Kingdom and France combined, totaling 739,000 bales.
However, during the 1923-33 period, the United Kingdom took about 23 per cent, averaging 1,604,000 bales and France 11 per cent, averaging 786,000 bales. Although exports to the United Kingdom are less than half what they were a year ago, Agriculture Department officials expect the United Kingdom to be the largest buyer under the subsidy program.
The percentage of American cotton shipped to Germany this season was 9 per cent, or 292,000 bales, compared with 23 per cent, or 1,638,000 bales in the 1923-33 period.
Foreign trade reports indicate that Japan plans to replenish depleted stocks of American cotton when the subsidy program is inaugurated. The extent to which Germany might increase purchases is not known. The Agriculture Department's attaché in Berlin reports, however, that the textile industry in that nation and in annexed Austria and Czechoslovakia has slowed down because of a raw material shortage.
Officials said the German's chief difficulty was a shortage of foreign exchange with which to finance cotton purchases. However, any action which lowered the price of cotton would make available exchange go further than at present.
Officials anticipate that subsidization of cotton exports to Germany and Japan would draw some criticism. They explained that the department was without authority to deny those countries the benefits so long as the United States maintained diplomatic and trade relations with them.
The department has not decided definitely whether it will subsidize lard exports. Prior to 1933, Germany took about one-third of America's lard shipments. Under a wheat export subsidy program inaugurated last August, Germany has bought about 2,000,000 bushels at prices averaging about 25 cents a bushel below domestic prices.

Uncle Jim Sings

Farm production has increased more than factory production in the past ten years, according to economists of the State College Extension Service. In the last two years average production on farms was 6 per cent more than in 1929; in factories 19 per cent less.

"Farm-Home Week" Program Developed

Although practical farmers and farm women will occupy a more important place than ever on the Farm and Home Week program at State College July 31-August 4, a tentative list of speakers announced by John W. Goodman and Miss Ruth Current, officials of the extension service in charge of arrangements, shows that an interesting convention is assured.
Governor Clyde R. Hoey heads the list, which also includes Dr. E. V. McCullom, head of the School of Hygiene and Public Health of Johns Hopkins University; Dr. T. B. Hutcheson, head of the agronomy department of Virginia Polytechnic Institute; Reuben Brigham, assistant director of the National Agricultural Extension Service; P. D. Sanders, editor of the Southern Planter; Oscar Johnston, president of the National Cotton Council; Dr. Malcolm D. Taylor of the American Marketing Association, Chapel Hill; Dr. Randolph Jones, Jr., of Duke University; and Dr. C. C. Carpenter, of Wake Forest College.
George R. Sockwell, owner and operator of the Reedy Fork Farms near Elon College in Guilford County, is president of the farmers' convention and will preside over the formal sessions. He is widely known as a successful farmer and for his cooperative system to help solve the tenant problem on his 400-acre farm.
Mrs. W. E. Neill of Newell in Mecklenburg County will preside over the women's sessions as president of the State Federation of Home Demonstration clubs. The Home Demonstration club women will observe Federation Day on Thursday, August 3, and Honor Day on Friday, August 4, as a part of the convention.
A program of entertainment and recreation also has been arranged for each evening during the week.

Demand Increases For Quality Eggs

There is a continuous and increasing demand on the part of the consuming public for quality eggs.

Egg quality, in general, involves the size, shape, color and shell texture from an external standpoint. Internally, the air cell should be firm, small and regular; the percent of firm albumin should be large; the yolk should have a standing up quality; the egg should be free from blood spots, embryo development, foreign bodies, and obnoxious odors and tastes.
To get this quality under summer conditions, says Prof. Roy S. Dearstyne, head of the State College Poultry Department, see to it that only infertile eggs are produced. "Aside from breeding purposes, the males serve no useful purpose in the flock. Fertile eggs develop rapidly during warm weather and definite embryos may be observed in several days in such eggs," he said.
"Poultrymen should also avoid dirty nests," he continued. "Dirty nests mean soiled eggs which must be cleaned before marketing. Eggs should never be washed unless they are to enter channels of immediate consumption."
"Eggs should be collected several times each day. In hot weather this is a necessity, since summer heat plus moisture leads to a breaking down of the white and the yolk of the egg and the air cells become greatly enlarged due to rapid evaporation. On collection, the eggs should be stored in a cool moist room at a temperature ranging from 32 to 50 degrees Fahrenheit."
Finally Prof. Dearstyne recommended that summer eggs be candled and that frequent deliveries be made, especially where storage facilities are inadequate.
