Another Marketing Season

Another tobacco marketing season gets underway next Tuesday, August 22, and Martin County is slated to blossom forth in full bloom as its thousands of farmers start exchanging the golden weed for crisp dollars. At the particular season of the year, the economic fate of this section is determined for another twelve months, and it is with tense eagerness that everyone, regardless of his business or calling, awaits the verdict to be sounded by the auctioneer.

As the marketing season fast approaches, a peculiar outlook is held as to price expectations. Of course, farmers are hopeful of high prices, but there is a marked hesitancy around their expectations. "We are hopeful we will get a fair price," they say as a general rule, sounding a conservative note that is certain to be reflected in their future activities.

With a fair price prevailing, more Martin County farmers can make preparations to finance their operations another season than at any time in recent years, other facts being equal. If the price average falls much below the 20-cent mark, the new year will be just another duplication of a hard struggle for existence.

But no dark year is anticipated, so let's hope for a successful marketing season.

Not Seeking Government Care

As well as some would like it, the American masses are not seeking full care from a thoughtful government. Rather, they are merely seeking protection from those who have in years passed turned and devoured them.

The farmer, while ready to accept all he can get, is asking no more than his rightful share to the national income. And it must be remembered right here that he is doing more work and receiving less of the national income than any group in the country today. Those who say the farmer is being favored with this and that at the hands of the government do not know the facts, for if they knew the facts they would say the farmer is entitled to far more than he is getting.

The industrial workers of this nation are not seeking unreasonable wages. They are merely asking in return for their labor an amount sufficient to maintain a decent standard of living in their homes.

But still there are those who say, "Today, there is a popular belief that the government should assume full responsibility for the masses."

There are those who point out the marked progress made and the high standard of living enjoyed by the common American. Look at the facts and one will see the common American living in a mortgaged home, listening to a mortgaged radio, eating from a mortgaged table and paying high installments and big interest. A full settlement tomorrow would find the American worker lower down in the scale of living than the serfs of old.

They are not asking that the system be changed. They are not asking the government to assume the responsibility of their fate. They are merely asking that they be given a chance to earn a decent living and participate in the American way of living.

There are some, it is to be admitted, who have thrown away their earthly belongings and sold their birthright for a mess of pottage, but when one stops and considers that there are millions who are still up with cancerous mortgages then he will have to admit that there was some fleecing done by somebody some time.

Some of those who oppose relief, jobs for the unemployed and houses for the unsheltered, are the very ones who made relief necessary, who took away the jobs and who drove the unsheltered from their homes. They helped do just that and now they are entreating a thoughtful government for trying to rehabilitate their souls and restore them to normal living.

If this country goes busted, and some say it will, it will not be because of the money spent for suffering humanity but it will go broke as a result of a system that lets people go hungry and cold in the midst of plenty.

Blood Of Turkeys

Shelby Star.

The unreconstructed rebel, that unpurged veteran of the Senate, Senator E. D. (Cotton Ed) Smith of South Carolina, is thinking much about wild turkeys these days. And in his meditation upon these fine birds he has reached the conclusion that it is the duty of the United States to buy 30,000 acres of land (in South Carolina) for the purpose of providing a sanctuary and preserving the blood and the stock of wild turkey.

To one who knows dogmatic Senator Smith, it is easy to visualize him pounding the conference table in Washington, demanding colorful and picturesque and sometimes inelegant but nonetheless forceful language, the rights of wild turkeys in America.

Remember last summer how Cotton Ed on the campaign used to berate the "niggers." Remember how he howled about white supremacy and the preservation of white supremacy which he thundered was threatened in the South? And it worked. For Cotton Ed is in the Senate again.

But have you heard of Cotton Ed proposing a sanctuary for ill or disabled Negroes or "poor whites"? Have you heard of him suggesting the establishment of homes and hospitals for indigent tenant farmers? For that matter, have you heard of him proposing that the government purchase and maintain 30,000 acres for farmers, cotton farmers, ridden to earth by economic conditions? That is what he proposes the government do for wild turkeys, purchase and maintain 30,000 acres in South Carolina.

Fortunately Cotton Ed's proposal was blocked at this session of Congress by one who takes governmental economy seriously and unbiased.

It is entirely probable, however, that the veteran South Carolina solon will bring the matter up again next year as he has threatened.

For there's a reason clearly revealed in news stories from Washington, which point out:

"The Senator's favorite sport is shooting wild turkeys and each season he bags the limit on hunting plantations on the South Carolina coast."

Among some Senators the idea still persists that the government is operated chiefly for the comfort, convenience and pleasure of Senators.
