age reduced under the program will very likely make every effort to go into the business of producing tobacco. The tobacco farmer who, by the way, has already lost close to fifty per cent of his old acreage, might want to go into the business of producing peanuts. If and when these groups start attacking each other, the farm program and farming itself is slated for tough sledding.

It must be remembered that the farmer who makes the sacrifices to build up a market that he might enjoy the fruits of his own labor in fair measure, is the farmer to get first consideration. If a farmer foregoes fifty per cent of his acreage, more or less, that market prices might hold to a figure akin to parity, then he is entitled to first consideration. It is not fair and just for a farmer to create that market and because he has created a market other farmers try to come in and enjoy the rewards of such action. If a favorable market had not been builded by the old tobacco or old peanut growers then other farmers would not care to enter into the production of peanuts or tobacco.

And it is a poor come to pass when production must be narrowed by starvation prices when it is possible to advance and maintain a planned program that will offer the farmer a fair return for his labor, and the labor of his wife and children.

If the dissention stirring slowly under the surface at this time bursts forth in volume, about the only thing of any value on the farm will be the food the farmer and his family eats and the feed for his livestock. As far as a market is concerned, there'll be places for farm products but there'll be little remuneration for the farmer in exchange.

Indifferent Public Opinion

Plagued by large-scale gambling for years, the citizens of several mid-western cities finally recognized the damaging effects of the illegal practice and almost overnight those citizens brought pressure upon the authorities to clean up the rackets. The change was brought about solely by public opinion.

It has been the rule rather than the exception for law-enforcement to follow in the wake of public opinion. Indifference on the part of the general public has lowered the efficiency of enforcement agencies and indirectly aided the cause of crime.

There is a marked indifference to the laws throughout the country. Often those who criticize the action of the other fellow turn around and act indifferent to law enforcement when they themselves are directly involved. Speeding and reckless driving are deplored day in and day out, but it is no rare thing for those deploring such dangerous practices to turn around and drive recklessly and speed through busy streets and school zones.

Often the activities of the courts come in for criticism, but in more cases than one the critic will take the stand and swear to a lie for a friend or even an acquaintance.

When public opinion demands a strict observance of the traffic laws and demands the courts to mete out due punishment, when the general public abides by the laws and participates in the enforcement of those laws, then, and not before, will hazards be lessened and open violations of all law and order be curbed.

We criticize the driver who speeds through our streets or the driver who ignores the little stop signs at street intersections and pays no attention to traffic regulations along the road, but we, as motorists, crash the stop signs, speed through the streets and go helter skelter and with the inherent feeling that the law was not meant for us.

Just as public opinion demanded a change in those mid-western cities, public opinion can demand a change right here at home.

Bronchitis, acute or chronic, is an inflammatory condition of the mucous membranes lining the bronchial tubes. Creomulsion goes right to the seat of the trouble to loosen germ laden phlegm, increase secretion and aid nature to soothe and heal raw, tender, inflamed bronchial mucous membranes. Tell your druggist to sell you a bottle of Creomulsion with the understanding that you are to like the way it quickly allays the cough or you are to have your money back.

BRANCH BANK Guaranty Bank

What's Wrong?

It is really encouraging to hear a politician get up and tell about the Great State of North Carolina, its balanced agriculture, its belching smokestacks, its great school system, and its great this and that. It kinder makes one feel good to live in such a great commonwealth, to have some part, even though it may be a minor one, in the development of such a great section.

It is equally disheartening to get back in a little nook and scane the bare figures that are released to enlighten the people. Just recently there was issued a table showing the per capita bank resources by states. North Carolina, the great State that the political speaker would have us believe it to be, ranks 43 in the list, or just five places removed from the absolute bottom.

Declare a dividend tomorrow and in this great State with all its vast natural resources, its climate and its toiling hundreds of thousands and there would be only $124 to come from the banking world for each individual.

When one turns to New York where little wealth is actually created but where wealth is controlled, he sees the per capita bank resources approximating $1,767 as compared with a measly, shameful $124 in this great State of ours.

It is really disheartening and causes one to wonder what's wrong.

Dissention In The Ranks

Surviving the obstacles thrown in their path by a higher court and their own representatives, farmers are now facing a greater obstacle in their march for agricultural freedom.

Dissention among their own ranks is said to be developing, and unless their differences can be smoothed over and ironed out collectively then the farmer is headed for the same old rut where there is no liberty, freedom or the means to a decent living.

The dissention will appear as the new 1940 acreage quotas are announced. The situation will then be aggravated by outside groups who for the very simple reason that the acreage to certain crops is being reduced in another section will want to enter upon the cultivation of those crops that were foreign to them in the past in their own section.
