method of fixing tariffs gave the farmers a better "break" than the present system. The high tariff walls set up by the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act in 1922 and increased further by the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act in 1930 succeeded only in provoking retaliatory measures against the sale of U. S. farm products in foreign markets.

Cotton is slightly stronger than in the past and the control program should hold American production in line. However, we must give more care to our cotton crop, using good seed, fertilizing properly and making definite plans to fight the boll weevil if we expect to make a profit.

War, and not the reciprocal trade agreements, is now the important factor affecting world trade. Thus, exports of aircraft, machine tools, metals and petroleum products show an increase of nearly 100 million dollars for 1939 over 1938, whereas foodstuffs and tobacco have been elbowed out of the export picture.
