They Would Tear Down And Not Build Up

Lincoln's recent birthday anniversary resounded with the guns of Republicans marking the opening of the 1940 relentless attack against the New Deal. From coast to coast and from top to bottom, the Lincoln Day speakers would tear down and not build up. Their addresses were bitter attacks against something, but there is no record where just one offered a substitute, a way for righting what they so readily declare a wrong.

The Old Guard Republicans, the proclamaers of rugged individualism in all its implications and who scream about taking away the individual and collective rights of the people forget they are attacking just what the great majority of people wanted at the end of the Hoover period back in 1933.

Eagerly read were accounts of the great Republican Party leaders' addresses, but in many one of them was there any hope offered for improving what we have now. There was some mention made of governmental spending and a return to the old Hoover system in which Wall Street was to get the first and the Devil the hindmost.

The meetings rang out clear with a note that good Republicans enjoy hearing, but the contents of the addresses carried nothing that the common man wanted to hear.

Not Alone

Writing in the Publisher's Auxiliary, trade paper in the newspaper field, Wright A. Patterson ably points out the value of small-town life. He says:

An American country town, where no one is alone.

Where all are friends, where neighborliness and kindness prevail, where each is his brother's keeper, where no one is alone.

Where life is simple, where there is kindness and warmth and friendliness for all and from all. Where homes are the abiding places of happy families and into which all are welcomed without distinctions.

Where unselfishness prevails, and affection and thoughtfulness is evidenced each day and hour.

Where Banker Brown is the friend and associate of Drayman Stine, and lends a helping hand when Mr. Stine or little Jimmy Stine is ill.

Where Merchant Smith pats crippled Jerry Murphy's tumbled head and hands him a bit of candy or a cookie, which Jerry's widowed mother could not buy.

Where neighbors drop in by the hour on feeble Grandmother Goodman, carrying nourishing foods to tempt her falling appetite, so she may not feel alone.

Where every home is open to Sam Plover, the town barber, and his small son, Willie, while Mrs. Plover languishes in the hospital, that they may not feel alone.

Where there are no class distinctions, no social outcasts, no one without friends. Where no one is alone.

That is the American country town. As near a paradise as this earth can provide.

To be a part of such a community is a privilege. To perform a service for its kindly people is the even greater privilege that comes to the editor of a country community newspaper.

He records the arrival of little Mary Jones and the joy of her parents. He has a mention of her when she enters the first grade in school. He prints a brief story of her parties. He records her name as a graduate from the grade school and when she enters high school, when she goes away to college, and then welcomes her home when her college days are over. He carries in his columns the announcement of her engagement to Sam Coles and a column or more about the wedding and the establishment of her new home.

He prepares with a loving heart a tribute for Grandma when she passes to the great beyond.

He records the comings and goings of the people of the community without distinction as to class or social standing. They are all people of the community, all of equal merit.

His job and his privilege is to protect and promote the interests of such a town and such people—a job when well done that is worth having.

May America keep and preserve her country communities where kindness and friendships and real culture reign—Where no one is alone.

Time To Change

It is about time the Republican Party changed its tactics. Instead of using all of its breath in condemning the present administration and its policies, the Old Guard should give an inkling of what it would do were the voters to shift the seat of power from one party to the other.

Business has pondered over what to expect from the present administration and the Old Guard has pointed out that fact, but so far the Old Guard has advanced no definite policy of its own.

THE LETTER-BOX

A WORTHY CAUSE

Plum Williams, Washington-Williamston highway, five miles out of Williamston, place familiar to thousands of his former customers and friends, was burned out last Monday night while he and his wife were visiting a doctor in Williamston.

This is just a suggestion that all of his old friends and customers make a point to hand him while passing, or mail him a small "something" which will be a great help to him.

He is burned out, left flat. He has sent his wife to her people and he is sleeping in the backhouse where there is not even a stove.

A little assistance just at this time will be of great comfort to Plum, and he will appreciate it and greet you with a smile and manner that will fully repay you. Let all friends rally to his aid.

A FRIEND.
