

Opening of Schools Brings A Warning To N.C. Car Drivers

The opening of schools throughout the State drew this week from Ronald Hocutt, director of the Highway Safety Division a reminder that pedestrian fatalities among school-age children have taken an upward trend in North Carolina in the past few years.

"As a matter of fact," the safety director stated, the percentage of pedestrian deaths in the school-age group in this State is more than double the percentage of pedestrian fatalities in all age groups."

During the 1937-38 school year, he pointed out, a total of 91 school-age children were killed on North Carolina streets and highways. Of these, 58 were pedestrians, that is, they were walking to and from school, playing in the street or roadway, and running into the street. This was approximately 64 per cent of the total fatalities in that age group.

During the 1938-39 school term, 79 school-age children were killed. This was a 13 per cent reduction from the 91 killed the previous school year. But—67 of the 79 fatalities were pedestrians, this representing 84 per cent of the total number.

During the 1939-40 school year, 56 of the 71 school-age children killed in traffic accidents were pedestrians, this being 80 per cent of the total.

"This high ratio of pedestrian fatalities among school-age children is most alarming," Safety Director Hocutt said, "especially in view of the fact that only about 35 per cent of all traffic accident victims in the State and nation are pedestrians."

"These figures speak for themselves," he added, "in challenging parents of all school-age children to train their children not to play in the street and not to run into the street or road or attempt to cross without first looking both ways to be sure the way is clear."

Lists Uncle Sam's Strategic Materials

Manganese, rubber and tin are the "Big Three" of Uncle Sam's strategic materials—so called because they are vital to national defense, but surrounded with difficult procurement problems. The U. S. faced near disaster in 1918 because of lack of manganese—the ore that puts the "starch" in steel—and until recently nearly all of our manganese has had to be imported from such far-off sources as Russia, India, Africa and Brazil. The Cuban-American Manganese corporation is expanding the capacity of its plant near Santiago from 100,000 tons to 130,000 tons annually, effective next January 1. Langbourne M. Williams, Jr., president of Freeport Sulphur Company, of which the manganese corporation is a subsidiary, said that when development of the low-grade Cuban ores was started, 10 years ago, it was with the knowledge that a large, nearby source of manganese was thus being established as a bolsterer of our national defense set-up. They had to contend with a major earthquake, a revolution, and three floods before operations became technically and economically successful, in 1937, so he said it was "fratifying, after such a struggle, that the company is able with its own funds to increase its plant capacity, at the request of the Defense Advisory Commission, to augment the nation's defense resources."
