The Law-Maker's Role

Quitting the congressional halls in the Nation's Capital of his own accord some few years ago, a law-maker decided to comment on his role there.

"It is no longer a place to make laws and direct the destiny of the country," he wrote. He added that laws were passed, but in too many cases they are warped to fit the wishes of a political gang back home, their success being measured in terms of dollars taken from the "pork barrel".

"The chosen representative of the people hardly has time to locate his seat in the Congress before he is besieged with all kinds of requests. There's the shiftless job hunter who wants a public test to sack. There's the pressure groups seeking certain legislation that will put money into their pockets. The corporations demand a favor that will cost the taxpayers. The social reformers want this and that. The chiselers are ready to push their claims."

There are perplexing problems in this world, to be sure, but the solution to those problems is recognized as a possibility while there is no end, not even any hope for an end, to the unreasonable demands made upon a representative or a senator by his own people.

We are ready to condemn our government when it falters in times of stress, but, after all, the trouble lies back home among the people who demand corrupt practices and political hand-outs. The WPA, an institution of noble intent, is a glaring example. Count the fingers in the pie there, learn how they got there and a greater respect will follow for the man on the shovel and for the humanitarian who planned the agency to feed the jobless hungry.

Simplicity of character is the natural result of profound thought.—Hazlitt

What Is Mr. Willkie?

After declaring Mr. Roosevelt was a dictator-traitor, the St. Louis "Post-Dispatch" comes out and says that after following Mr. Willkie through the early stages of his campaign that it must turn to Mr. Roosevelt for President. If Mr. Roosevelt is a dictator-traitor in the eyes of the St. Louis paper then what is Mr. Willkie?

Then there are those who feather their nests under the Democratic party, and yet through their slow-thinking processes declare they don't know who to vote for for President. No one is to be denied the right to vote for whom he pleases, but it is disgusting in this late stage in the campaign to hear someone say he is not sure how he should vote. If Mr. Roosevelt has not done enough in the seven and one-half years as President and if he hasn't said enough in the current campaign to make it easy for a person to make up his mind, and if Mr. Willkie has not displayed so strikingly his weaknesses to enable one to make a decision, then it is apparent that this country is going to die from an over-dose of hallucinations or conscience appeasements.

Publicity Stunt

That Austin, Minnesota, minister who declares to the world that he will not register for selective military training apparently is promoting a freak publicity stunt rather than registering his honest convictions. Granting the youthful clergyman his conscientious objections, one then looks upon his far-flung declaration as a cheap stunt.

"I must choose to follow my Christian conscience," the minister declares over a world-wide news agency. Instead of his boasting about the choice he is making, the minister would have done well to enlighten the people what his choice would be under the domination of Hitler. If the conscience he claims to possess is worth so much, then it would appear to be worth fighting for.

There are those who hate war and don't want to fight. These desires, however, are pushed into the background when the American way of life is threatened, and to fight for that way of life would be much easier if the one in combat knew that he was not shielding such men as the Minnesota minister.

Out Of Balance

That portion of the world around Europe and Asia is experiencing untold suffering, pestilence and death as a result of war. Countless numbers there are facing starvation while we are burdened and bent with surpluses. The world is out of balance. But those factors that tend to upset world conditions are no where more pronounced than they are right here in our own country.

We deliberately throw away or indirectly waste more than enough to maintain an equal balance at home and to alter to some extent the haphazard conditions in other lands. But we merrily go on our way, spending for useless things, things of questionable value and then growl about meeting the obligations imposed in an effort to maintain a balance in our own land and in the world.

"Jesus' Observation of the Sabbath" and "Choosing His Disciples" are the sermon-subjects for Sunday morning and Sunday evening. The Lord's Day and Discipleship are vital subjects for our time and we, as followers of Jesus Christ, need to know His mind on them. The sermons will be presented with exposition of scriptures. The word of God has principles applicable to our modern age. There is a right way and there is a wrong way to use the Lord's Day. People can or cannot be Christ's disciples.
