One For All

The task of electing a president for the term beginning next January is mighty nigh complete at this time. Mud-slinging and unfair tactics have marred the campaign with the guilt resting on the shoulders of those who hold membership in both parties. However regrettable it may be, the practice is common to our way of government and its principles guaranteeing freedom of speech along with other cherished liberties. Just so long as an individual or group of individuals can shout to the world the attacks read and heard these past few weeks one can rest assured that the foundation of Democracy remains intact.

The ballots are yet to be counted, but tomorrow the banner of one of the two nominees will wave triumphant. Regardless of who holds that banner, we, as a united people, should remember that it is our banner he holds, that we must rally behind that banner, join the march and ever push forward that the American way of life might be handed to the succeeding generation unimpaired.

We, as a people, must remember, too, that the election of a President and Vice President does not offer a solution to the far-reaching problem facing us today. Able and courageous leadership is needed for any undertaking if success is to be attained, but the degree of success our government attains these next four years is to be determined by the people, as a whole and not by any one leader, group of leaders or by any one party. A united front is necessary if we are to achieve the goal exemplifying the American way of life. Good government and progress are not instituted into the people; good government and progress comes out of the people. If we challenge the leadership of the next administration, if we do everything in our power to sabotage its plans, irrespective of value or merit, we will have done much to hinder and cripple the march of progress that has been so marked these past seven and one-half years.

With world conditions as they are and with uncertainty and imperative changes of momentous significance staring us in the face, the future does not look so bright. Possibly our economic system will have to be adjusted even altered to some extent to cope with a program of a world gone mad. But as long as men are free, as long as men feel they are sharing fairly in the fruits of their own labor and initiative, there is not so much for us in this part of the world to worry about. We dare say there is no problem that cannot be solved partially or in its entirety by a people who are assured that their leaders have not broken faith with them.

There is a huge debt hanging over the nation, but we dare say that that debt can be paid far more easily today under present conditions than the much smaller one could have been paid back in 1932-33 under conditions as they existed then. The same declaration can be made with equal certainty for the other problems that face this nation.

To accomplish the common tasks before us we must cast aside partisanship, fight for that which is right and fight against that which is wrong.

Roosevelt or Willkie, the government in Washington is still that of the people. May the people recognize that ownership and cherish the right to support and enjoy it. Today there are two nominees, but tomorrow it will be one champion for all.

Editors And Agents Comprise Farm Unit

Weekly newspaper editors and county farm and home agents make up a team that has been one of the most potent forces in the improvement of farming and rural living in the past 25 years. These are the sentiments of M. L. Wilson, director of extension for the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Director I. O. Schaub of the State College Extension Service says he heartily concurs in the views expressed by the Federal leader.

Of the beginning of this period of team work, Director Wilson says, "The United States was nearing the end of the row as far as new land was concerned. In the more carefully cultivated sections, farming methods lagged behind experimental advances in agricultural science. In this picture stepped the county agent and traveled from farm to farm on foot, on horseback and in buggies.

"On the country editor the agent leaned heavily from the earliest days. Usually the work of the county agent made good newspaper copy. Frequently he would write a column of his own in the weekly paper and his writings were compact with good sense.

"Judged solely as a job in practical, popular education, the achievement of the county agent ranks high in American social history. The county agent is now equipped with an automobile and a clerical force in his office, but is most frequently to be found at some farm talking about crops and rural improvements. The weekly editor is still one of his most highly valued allies."

To this Director Schaub of the North Carolina Extension Service adds: "Agricultural extension work simply is giving information about better ways of farm living and one of the best methods of reaching a farm audience is through the columns of local papers whose editors the farm people know and trust."

"Since the summer of 1914 exclusive copy for weekly papers has been mailed each week from the office of Frank H. Jeter, State College editor. The weekly newspapers of North Carolina have, since the beginning, given liberally of their space to this cooperative program of rural betterment."

Income
The U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics estimates that the 1941 farm income will be about $9,000,000 and may reach the highest point since 1929.
