

18 Farm Machines On Rationed List

David S. Weaver, in charge of Agricultural Engineering Extension at N. C. State College, announces that 18 types of farm machines are on the list to be rationed due to the war-time shortages of metals and manufacturing facilities. In order to obtain any one of these machines, a farmer must have his application approved by a special rationing committee which will be set up in each county in the state.

The 18 types of machinery on the rationed list are: Combines, disc harrows, feed grinders, fertilizer distributors, grain drills, hay balers, lime spreaders, manure spreaders, milk coolers, milking machines, pick-up balers, potato diggers, shredders, corn pickers, beet lifters, beet loaders, grain elevators, and all kinds of tractors.

"If you will need one of these machines for next season," said Weaver in a suggestion to farmers, "contact your county farm agent who is making a survey to determine the needs of the community in order that allotments can be worked out."

The special rationing committee for farm machinery in each county will be composed of three farmers, one of whom will be the chairman of the County AAA committee. The other two will be representative farmers appointed by the County USDA War Board.

In addition to the group of machines which are extremely scarce, there is a second group somewhat less scarce. These may be sold upon certification by the farmer to the dealer that the equipment is required for current agricultural production. A third group consists of items that may be sold without restriction.

"The important thing now," said Weaver, "is for every farmer to report to his county agent's office his prospective machinery needs for 1943."

Glass Proves Aid To High-flying Bombers

Glass goes to war, and the result is one of man's oldest known materials is helping our ultra-modern bombers fly higher than ever before. Odd as it may sound, glass is proving to be a tough and rough material for fighting weapons. For example, an airplane safety glass has been developed by the Libby-Owens-Ford Glass company and is serving the dual purpose of helping to protect bomber pilots and gun crews from enemy bullets while offering them unhampered and perfect vision. Other types of glass are playing important roles on battleships, in the army's tanks, as windshields for mosquito torpedo boats and as facings for the Army's new 800,000,000 candlepower aerial searchlights.

British Flood Red Cross London Club with Offers To Entertain Doughboys

Alexandria, Va. — Thousands of British families have opened their homes to welcome the troops of Uncle Sam's Armed Forces now serving in the British Isles, American Red Cross workers in London report.

More than 3,000 offers of hospitality for the service men are flooding the Central Leave Information Bureau of the American Red Cross Washington Club in London each week.

"We have been absolutely staggered by the response to the Red Cross appeal for offers to entertain United States troops on leave," William E. Stevenson, American Red Cross delegate to Britain, reported. "We are busy classifying the first 5,000 invitations, and they continue to pour in at the rate of 3,000 each week."

The invitations, the Red Cross reports, come from the rich and humble alike. They come from lonely farms in Scotland, mining villages in Northumbria, cottages and country houses in the Midland, the homes of London suburbs.
