

War As It Relates To Home Front Is Reviewed for Week

We aren't short of meats, in fact we'll have the largest supply in history this year, but it will fall short of unrestricted demand by more than six billion pounds.

Controls and restrictions, brought on by war needs and shortages, extend from hairpins to casket handles. Women in 1943 will have to make out with one-fourth of the bobbins or hairpins they used this year.

Customers of retail stores will find many of the merchandising "inducements" and "frills" missing from store services, pick-up and delivery services will be cut to the bone.

The lumber shortage this year is four to six billion board feet, next year we'll need 39 billion feet as against average production of less than 25 billion.

Aimed at rising living costs are price ceilings for soybean, corn and peanut oils, for the new Victory line of waterproof rubber footwear, reusable iron and steel pipe, and a number of services—textile printing, storage and terminal, automotive repair, maintenance, and re-building.

Small Business To Get Aid In the last half of September about six million dollars worth of war contracts went to small business, and plans are in the making to ease the war liabilities of small business, and to assist it in recouping equipment losses after the war.

Western Indiana have gone on the warpath against the Axis, they've returned to the ways of their fathers, abandoned autos to ride horseback. Enlistment in the high school Victory Corps, which will train students for military service or civilian war work, is open to every high school student.

Munition Production Is Behind Schedule

American munitions production is still not up to snuff, according to the official report on output released last week by the War Production Board. War material production in August fell short of the goal by about 14 per cent, the report stated, and that followed a July in which the figure was some 7 per cent less than anticipated.
