THURSDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1923.

Nine years ago, I took back sharp the Little Editor of The Advance arrived in Elizabeth City, crying "What's the Advance intended to do?" and a notch higher in determination to bring to the city what has sought to bring to the determination of the people on the 20th of December, 1914. The members. And that is why, in the full clutch of circumstance, the Little Old Advance has never wined nor cried aloud; and why again, beneath the bludgeoning of fate, its head, though at times bloody, has never yet been bowed.

Law and Common Sense

The Advance is not disposed to make a racket over the fact that the ban against the sale and the firing of firecrackers in Elizabeth City, by reason of failure to include an ordinance forbidding both when the city ordinances were recently revised and recoded, has been lifted.

This newspaper is frank to say that for its own part it prefers a safe and sane Christmas; but the fireworks law of late years has been so much violated or evaded, that The Advance is willing to see put to a test the contention of certain advocates of the removal of the ban against the firing and sale of them in the city limits who claim that with the restrictions against fireworks removed interest in them would in reality be lessened.

But the fact that it is no longer a misdemeanor to shoot a firecracker in the city does not mean that the police have no supervision over reckless or careless or wantonly dangerous and annoying practices in the handling of fireworks.

Wednesday night, for instance, during the Elks show, careless but full grown young men kept up a fusillade of fireworks in the neighborhood of the Alkrama theater to the point of very really disturbing those who were attending the show. A few hoodlums actually threw firecrackers into the foyer of the theater. This the police could easily and most certainly should have dealt with.

Again, manifestly the discharge of fireworks where little children are crowded together, as on the school grounds, is a dangerous practice, and one that the teachers should be able to handle, if necessary, so far as school grounds are concerned. Already one hears of a boy at school who narrowly escaped serious injury to his eyesight one day this week by the explosion of a firecracker; and then comes the tale of a giant cracker exploding in a youngster's bookbag and wrecking the sack. It goes without argument, The Advance takes it, that no matter how wide open the town may be to the shooting of fireworks, the firing of them on the schoolground should be most strictly prohibited. Parents who realize the danger of fireworks can keep their little children off the streets to some extent. They can not very well keep them off the school grounds.

Praise for Miss Albertson. Miss Catherine Albertson of Elizabeth City, now field secretary of the State Parent-Teachers' Association, has been mak-

ELIZABETH CITY SEVEN YEARS AGO. From the Files of The Daily Advance.

Tom Sims Says. The city of Elizabeth City, N. C., seven years ago. The population was 10,000. The city was then a small town. The city was then a small town. The city was then a small town.

What is a public school and what is it for? Let university professors deliver their carefully wrought out lectures upon this big question and they may be illuminating but their stereotyped discourse will fall with a feeble sound upon the ear of one who has listened to the thought compelling interpretation by Miss Catherine Albertson, field secretary of the State-Parent-Teacher Association. This woman goes direct to the purpose for which the school is established, and she never loses sight of the real aim in child training till she has finished a most inspiring exposition of thought and study.

Miss Albertson is intensely feminine in her line of reasoning; a mother could not deliver a more cogent appeal for the welfare of her child than does this woman who is appearing in behalf of the thousands of youngsters who are surrounded by four walls and a teacher and told to concentrate. The parent is brought into the equation, by force of Miss Albertson's argument, and shown wherein duty lies—duty that began with the formation of the free school system and never ends.

Parent-Teacher Associations is the pet scheme for eliciting co-operation between teacher and parent and this is the top-liner on the program when Miss Albertson speaks; but before she is through talking there is ample food for thought—and enough to spare for every soul indressed by the prattle of a youngster. What is a public school and what is it for? Let Miss Albertson answer. If our mind has sufficient depth to sound out her reasoning, the public school is instituted to be a common ground upon which teacher and parent can meet and organize to build noble manhood and pure womanhood—in addition to all the book learning that can be crowded upon the brain of an American boy or girl.

This phase of extension work will not fail of wholesome results, and North Carolina College for Women is functioning mightily in the cause of education in sending Miss Albertson over the State.
