ABE MARTIN

Next I cry, over a bobbed head, the most futile thing you know of is quarrelling with your wife. Some stranger asked Constable Plam what had become of the old Klukler family, and he said, "It all died at once a few Sundays ago."

We Wonder

The city of Henderson, capital of the County of Vance, celebrated on Monday the opening of its new public library. We confess that we are not able to read the description of this library without feeling a bit envious. We quote from the Henderson Daily Dispatch:

The library has been erected at a cost of approximately $40,000 to the donors. The lot cost upwards of $5,000, it being owned by the Perrys for many years. The building itself has been erected at an outlay of considerably more than $25,000, and an additional $5,000 was donated in cash for the purchase of books.

The library has a capacity for 15,000 volumes, and starts off with approximately 3,000 volumes. Many of these books have been given by the people of the community, in addition to the gifts of the Perrys. Local citizens have also contributed a large assortment of magazines and newspapers to be on file regularly at the library. There are storage shelves for the books, and reading rooms for both the young people and adults, the two being separated by shelves of books.

One of the big features of the interior is the handsome frieze in the ceiling, depicting the "Triumph of Alexander into Babylon." It is said to be a great masterpiece, and is handsomely done by its creator.

In the rear hangs an oil painting of Leslie Perry when he was a lad of but five summers. It was done by his mother, who is a painter. Space has been made in the front for a large oil painting of the young man at the time of his death. This is in process of preparation and has not been received.

In the basement is an assembly room large enough to accommodate 100 people seated. There is also a large stage. This room is intended for club meetings or for lectures to kindergarten classes and the like.

This library was presented to the city of Henderson by the parents and the wife of a young man who died there not long ago. We wonder if somebody will have to die in Elizabeth City leaving wealthy parents and wife childless, before we can have a public library here?

We find it encouraging to note, in looking over the files of 1923, that this newspaper's circulation, now at the highest mark it has ever reached, has been increased by fully one-third since a year ago today.

Already having a linotype operator who, like the prince, is out every night, we are expecting next to see stuck down, under our linotype machine a pair of red silk socks and brown suede shoes.

THAT'S WHAT MAKES 'EM WILD

Pasquotank Leads

The Pasquotank Children's Home experiment is being watched with interest all over the State. And through it Elizabeth City is getting publicity that is, so far, from every standpoint desirable. The following comment is from Thursday's News and Observer:

The new Children's Home in Pasquotank County, we are convinced, is a move in the right direction, and there is every reason to believe, experiment though it may be on the part of the people of the County, that time will demonstrate its worth. There are those in North Carolina who, recognizing some apparent defects in the operation of our laws for the welfare of juveniles, are inclined to condemn the whole policy. Recently, an agent of a State department took occasion to join with Asheville police officials in condemning the juveniles court law because they asserted, it made the hand of the law powerless to punish juveniles who were guilty, and encouraged delinquency on the part of the young.

While our State policy recognizes that youthful offenders are not to be classed with hardened criminals, and dedicates itself to the principle of reformation rather than outlawing, it is possible that the means by which our aims may be made effective. There is a gap in the chain. While we have insisted that girls and boys shall not share the measure of the law prescribed for mature offenders, we have not adequately provided for the care, treatment and training of youthful delinquents. The Jackson Training School is running over. Samaritans in the same condition. New institutions for white and colored delinquents authorized do not promise to greatly relieve the situation. The matter is one for the Legislature which meets in January. And it should prescribe for the ill of the system, not by repealing the law but by providing machinery to make it more serviceable. When our performance fails to measure up to our ideal, the remedy surely is not to reject the ideal.

In so far as the fact that the police seized only a half pint of liquor during the month of August indicates that less liquor is being sold in Elizabeth City than heretofore, well and good; but in so far as it is a reflection of an impression in the police department that catching the bootlegger is the business of County, State and Federal authorities rather than of the police department, it deserves sharp protest. For enforcement of the liquor law, as any other law, in the corporate limits of the city the police are chiefly responsible.

Betcher with all the pictures the newspapers have printed of him, you'd hardly know the prince were you to see him.

The Raleigh Times voices our sentiment when it says: "We don't care much what happens in baseball so long as Walter Johnson gets in the World Series." Permit us to add "and so long as the World Series is played by Eastern daylight saving time," and we'll strike out the "much."

Looks as if the dispatch about the prince's spending a night out might as well be marked "stop" and dated up daily.

Everyman's Investments

SIXTY-SECOND ARTICLE Speculation in Foreign Exchange

In the last article in this series I named some of the considerations affecting the investment rating of foreign bonds. There are still things to be said along this line. The first is that to buy a foreign bond payable in a foreign currency involves an additional uncertainty in that the currencies of other nations ever since the world war have lacked stability as compared with the dollar. To a degree a foreign government bond payable in any other money than our own is a speculation in foreign exchange. For most people this is inadvisable. There are plenty of foreign issues payable in dollars and traded in daily on the New York Stock Exchange to which this speculative feature does not attach. As a rule also the dollar bonds of foreign countries do not fluctuate over so wide a range as do sterling or franc bonds. It is very important to keep this distinction in mind when estimating the risk involved in a foreign security. Taking the case of Germany for instance there is no possible comparison between the mark bonds of German municipalities and the proposed international German loan, the American portion of which will be payable in dollars. The two belong to entirely different classifications. It is perfectly possible for a foreign government bond payable in principal and interest in American currency to be entirely sound and a desirable investment and a bond of the same government payable in its own currency to be speculative in the extreme. Secondly there is the matter of diversification. No matter how attractive a foreign security may be no one is justified in putting all his funds into any one investment. He should not even put all capital properly available for foreign investment into any one nation's obligations. By dividing up the sum the risk is spread out. It is wise to diversify not only as between the different nations of Europe but as between European and South American investments. Political developments are not likely simultaneously to affect securities so widely separated geographically. Within these limitations there can be no objection to putting a proportion of one's funds into good foreign securities and such a course will substantially increase tax income upon the whole.

Herrin Feud Outgrowth Of Unpunished 1922 Massacre

Leniency Toward Killings in Labor War Two Years Ago Brings Harvest of Lawlessness, in Which Klan, Anti-Klan and Idleness are Main Factors

Herrin, Ill., Sept. 5.—The Herrin massacre of June 1922 rises to plane Williamson County in her present plight. That slaughter is now exacting its toll in new killings, depression and riotous lawlessness. So the leaders of the community here will tell you in private, although mention of the subject in an audible voice is taboo. Terrorism since then has been Herrin's stock in trade, and open voiced opposition a signal for serious trouble.

The unpunished slaying of 21 men near here two years ago says Williamson County the personalities of her present feud, brought depression at the mines and laid the ground work for future bitter antagonisms. It is credited with having created the general sear with which local people regard law enforcement, and the hopelessness with which the disintegrated population looks for a return to normal. This crime also gave the county her present sheriff, George Galligan, and his principal deputy, Ora Thomas. It marked District Attorney Delos Duty, who prosecuted the accused men, and set up Dr. J. T. Black and the Herrin Hospital for future attack. There too, was taught the first lesson in lawlessness to the few additional lawbreakers, who form the core of the present murders feud.

The whole fight here is regarded now as a matter largely of personalities, with Sheriff Galligan the principal object of attack. The sheriff was elected by the labor vote because of his connection with the outbreak in 1922. Two of his relatives were defendants at that time. The sheriff, a former miner, looks like anything but a fighting Irishman. On more than one occasion he has appeared one of the most frightened men in the county, a short, heavy set, very excitable man. His enemies accuse him of countenancing lawlessness, and thus leading to the Ku Klux Klan wholesale liquor raids of the past winter which led to the first killing of the present feud. When in trouble the sheriff has a habit of calling for the National Guard, and then retiring to the confines of the county jail until the trouble blows over.

It so happens that his principal adviser is Ora Thomas, organizer of the Knights of the Plumed Circle, counter organization to the Klan. Thomas was an investigator for the defense after the Herrin massacre and is reputed to be a former St. Louis gangster who
