Chapel Hill School Opens.

On Monday at the noon hour Chapel Hill School began its 1916-17 session in a very impressive style. Every person who had, or was supposed to have an interest in the school was invited to attend this beginning in order to gather a true conception of the work that has been mapped out for the ensuing term.

A fact to be deplored is that only a few patrons of the school were present. A stranger would naturally conclude that the people of that district thought but very little of what education meant for their children. But we know that they are anxious for their children to be equipped adequately to confront life and its adversities when the burden is cast upon their shoulders.

A successful school must have the aid of the entire community, and without their co-operation little can be derived from whatever efforts the teachers display in connection with their regular duties.

Prof. Liverman, in his remarks to the small gathering, made it clear by black-board illustration that it was necessary for the students to attend regularly to gather all the benefits from a term of school. He also demonstrated in a very concise manner the need of support of the constituents of the school district. No matter how energetic and conscientious a teacher might be, he cannot obtain a hundred per cent. efficiency if the parents of the pupils fail to perform their duties.

Supt. Darden, in his address, suggested that they organize a Womans' Betterment Association, and conspire to make the school a community center, a place where every person in the district might come together for social purposes, and all work shoulder to shoulder for the enhancement of school facilities. He pointed out to them numerous ways in which they could accomplish much for their children.

Mr. W. F. Ausbon, Township Attendance Officer, made an animated address to those present, telling them just what to look for in the faculty of a school. No person is perfect, he said, and by this reference some of those present have gathered an erroneous conception of his real meaning. He stated that a part of the patrons would suppose a teacher to be spotless and pure white, while other would think otherwise.

For the benefit of those who failed to understand this remark we will endeavor to make his meaning a little clearer. His intention, no doubt, was to make some very flattering remarks in reference to Prof. Liverman's past record as principal of this school and the great things the school has accomplished during his contract with it. When he stated that no person is entirely without faults, he used but a common expression and one frequently used in reference to professional men and women in every vocation. He did not assail the character of either of the present teachers, and their conclusions along that line were drawn entirely too hastily.

Prof. Liverman is a man who has incurred the admiration of every person interested in his work there, and all of them join in saying that he has done remarkably well in the execution
