Problems Not Yet Solved

The multitudinous problems facing the Ameircan people were not solved in the reelection of President Roosevelt a few days ago. Surely, it is agreed, his reelection will make the tasks before each and everyone easier to solve and handle. But the task of supplying energy for the march ever onward is ours to ignore or support. Success or failure will be measured through our efforts, and not through those of the president.

Assuming the leadership of a depressed people four years ago, Mr. Roosevelt has led us far, and he did it despite strong opposition from some sections and with little aid from anyone. During the next four years, it is certain that every individual will have a part in carrying on and keeping in step with the Turning to the farmer's problem, it is almost certain that future aid will come through his own efforts. If he remains idle, he can expect little to be handed to him in the way of benefits or gifts. Surely, there is a leadership within the farming group that can take up where the President was forced to quit. Surely, the farmers themselves will rally around this leadership, and make for a more certain future for agriculture. Already the Farm Bureau, one of the leading organizations of its kind in the world, is forging ahead in the interest of agriculture. Will the farmers rally to its support, or will they stand idly by and gamble on what the marketing season will hold for them a year hence?

The laborer finding refuge from honest work when there is honest work will, no doubt, find it to his advantage to break away from the sheltering wings of the government. If the move requires more energy, and enter private employment whenever and wherever the opportunity presents itself.

The average man who has not received direct benefits from the New Deal, but who has been aided because others were aided, will have to continue to work and work hard. In so much as he pushes forward, he will profit to just that extent.

Big business is not going to return to the old policy of "the public be damned." So long as big business plays the game fair and square, then just that long will it prosper. The rules of the game may not seem fair at times, but in the long run business and the public will profit.

The entire country was all "het up" during the tecent campaign, and it may be well to continue "het up" in meeting and handling the problems that are to be expected day by day in the future.

Hold a Steady Course

Now is a good time for men to hold steady heads, while the United States is rejoicing at the success of democracy and enjoying a period of general pros-

We need to remember that we make the most mistakes when things run along too easily. We forget that it is in our unguarded moments that we let opportunities pass which we are unable to call back.

And, while things may look good on this side of the Atlantic, conditions in the Far East are by no means in good shape, and the war clouds are hanging rather heaviely over much of Europe and Asia. The cause that has only recently won a great victory in America is suffering greatly in the East, and democracy is trembling-to say the least-in Italy and Germany, as well as in Spain, with Fascism devouring democracy and proposing to rule with an iron hand.

While we may propose to keep out of entanglements with foreign nations, we must admit that our relations are such that we can scarcely hope to avoid complications in the event of a general European conflagration. So we Americans will have to apply the spirit of brotherly love and not demand the best of every international trade we engage in. We have too long sought a large export trade upon a principle of selling our trust-made goods too high in foreign lands while dumping our general farm supplies at starva-

We need to follow a course of conservatism as well as conservation, and take care of our resources, both as individuals and as a nation-and, most of all, we should hold our heads through seasons of prosperity.

Problem Simply Solved

Rated as the nation's safest automobile driver, John A. Burt, Utah man, was recently bombarded with questions by safety experts, statisticians and others interested in his driving method that earned for him the recognition. The man astounded his questioners with a very simple formula, one that was not crowded with mathematical precision, and one that did not take into consideration speed. The safe and sane rule followed by Burt centered around two words, just two small words, "Be Polite."

The Highway Patrol in this state and other agencies urging greater care on the highways are doing a splendid job in checking accidents, but they, with the aid of all others, cannot check the road hog, the inconsiderate driver who harbors the right that all the road belongs to him and no one else should even dare drive on it. But John Burt's formula would handle him, and how simple it is, too. Just be polite.
