INTER THE TIME TO WALK

Exercise in the Cold Air Will Be Found Both Enjoyable and Beneficial.

Winter weather diminishes greatly the time spent in the open air by those who ride in motorcars. It comes near putting bicycles out of use. From steamboats to canoes there is almost entire cessation of water outings.

All of which means that more walking instead of less ought to be done in cold weather. There is no other way of moving about in the open air, which keeps a healthy person's feet so warm and brings such a glow of warmth from the body itself. If the pedestrian is properly clad, especially in respect to keeping dryshod, all of the effects of winter walking should be beneficial.

With a little care and discretion such exercise can be made as agreeable as it is wholesome. Rightly timed and kept within bounds, winter walking is a good precaution against the ill effects of sedentary life and too much indoor

John M. Wilson, R. F. D. No. 1, Traveler's Rest, S. C., says: "Hardships weakened my kidneys and I had my kidneys and I had awful pains in my back. I steadily got worse and was terribly annoyed by scalding and too frequent passages of the kidney secretions. Rheumatic pains in my hips kept me awake and my ankles and feet swelled. I had awful dizzy spells, too. Doan's Kidney Pills restored me to good health."

Fact Is That When Much Running Is Done at Night, and the Speed Laws Observed, Battery Does Not Get Sufficient Current.

During the shorter days a frequent No sense so uncommon as common complaint to garage man or battery bands are fastened to each other by with the battery, though in nine times out of ten the man with the kick does not know that it is the battery. He will talk about the lights failing every once in a while, or the horn refusing to honk on demand. But in the majority of cases it is the battery which is at fault.

> "It is more difficult to keep the battery charged at this time of the year than it is in summer," according to an expert. The reason he gives for the trouble is "that the sun sets earlier, and just as our electric light and gas bills mount at home, because we light the lamps earlier, so it is with the auto. The driver who obeys the law uses more current.

"A complaint came in the other day from an owner who was experiencing trouble with his electric plant. The lights would not work right when he was running. Starting out there was there was trouble. The lamps were fitted with dimmers, and these would not work at all times; sometimes one would light and the other fail. He went to the garage man, and then the dimmers would not work at all. He went to an expert electrician, who looked over the battery and declared it to be all right; but on the ground that he was a battery expert and not a wiring expert, he could not say why the lights would not shine, and the owner had visions of stern policemen and the possibility of having to say: 'Good morning, judge, your honor,'

"His trouble was that he did most of his running at night, and as he carefully observed the speed laws the generator did not generate very much extra current, and the battery was being recharged at a rather low rate, while being discharged at a rather from supporting its load. high rate. In other words, he was chopping off both ends-burning both ends of his candle. Despite the preposterous title current which goes into the battery is under which they ran, the cabs were increased in proportion to the speed

"Generators are constructed so that they will deliver a normal charge to the battery for normal running; they instantly become sway-backed and topmust not be constructed so they will send out an excessive current, or they will overcharge the battery, and that is harmful. The sun sets much earlier now and the cool weather makes it necessary to use the starter more. In warm weather one little kick will start the car off; in cold weather it takes often from half a minute to a

Pneumatic Tube Combined With Steel Casing and an Outer Hard-Rubber Tire is the Latest.

A resilient wheel, in which a pneumatic tube is combined with a steel casing and an outer hard-rubber tire, has been patented, reports Popular Mechanics Magazine. The inner tube rests on a steel band that encircles the felly. Three steel bands inclose the tube, one at either side and one corresponding to an outer rim. The side and electric system expert has to do bolts, so flattened as not to interfere with the tube. The third steel band light, but after running a short time is itself inclosed with a hard-rubber cushion which engages the side steel bands by means of flanges on the latter. The side bands are so fastened to the wheel as not to interfere with the resiliency afforded by the pneumatic tire.

Jacking up Car to Save Tires.

Tires should only be jacked clear of the floor when there is a reasonable likelihood that they may become deflated and remain so for any great length of time, for instance, in the case of a car that is laid up for the winter and which will not be inspected at short intervals. There can be no doubt that the weight of a car acting for long periods on flat casings and deflated tubes is injurious to them, but there is no reason to suppose that a properly inflated tire suffers perceptible deterioration merely

BLACK TOM EXPLOSION MAY BE REPEATED

High explosives and munitions in large quantities are being handled in the same dangerous manner which led to the Black Tom explosion, according to a statement of the New York board of fire underwriters' bureau of surveys. "Th● situation is fully as dangerous at some points along the New Jersey waterfront as it was before the terrific Black Tous explosion on July 30," reads the statement. "Lighters or floats containing high explosives are handled and operated along waterfront property and piers with the same unlimited license as in the case of the cars." "Imitate Birds; Don't Fret."

The public health service, which has been gathering statistics on nervous diseases and their tendency to shorten life, issued a bulletin against worrying.
