All in all, Ajax, as he had been dubbed, was considered the most remarkable and in- eyed man-"oh, father, can't I go?" telligent ape that anyone aboard the Marjorie W, had ever seen. Nor was his intelligence the only remarkable attribute he owned. His stature and physique were, for an ape, awe-inspiring. That he was old was quite evident, but if his age had impaired his physical or mental powers in the slightest it was not apparent. And so at length the Marjorie W. came to England, and there the officers and the scientists, filled with compassion for the pitiful wreck of a man they had rescued from the jungles, furnished Paulvitch with funds and bid him and Ajax Godspeed. Upon the dock and all through the journey to London the Russian had his hands full with Ajax. Each new face of the thousands that came within the anthrapoid's ken must be carefully scrutinized, much to the horror of many of his victims. But at last, failing apparently to discover whom he sought, the great ape relapsed into morbid apdifference, only occasionally evincing interest in a passing face. In London Paulvitch went directly with his prize to a famous animal trainer. This man was much impressed with Ajax, with the result that he agreed to train him for a lion's share of the profits of exhibiting him and in the meantime to provide for the keep of both the ape and his owner.

"I doubt if there is any danger of his inheriting a taste for jungle life from me," replied the man. "for I cannot conceive, that such a thing may be transmitted from father to son. And sometimes, Jane, I think that in your solicitude for his future you go a bit too far in your restrictive measures. His love for animals-his desire, for example, to see this trained ape-is only natural in a healthy, normal boy of his age."

And so came Ajax to London, and there was forged another link in the chain of strange circumstances that were to affect the lives of many people,

CHAPTER II.

"To See Ajax."

Mr. Harold Moore was a billouscountenanced, studious young man. He took himself very seriously, and his life and his work, which latter was the tutoring of the young son of Lord Greystoke, a British hobieman. He felt that his charge was not making the progress that his parents had a right to expect, and he was now conboy's mother.

But that lady only shook her head in a most positive manner and, turning to Mr. Moore, asked him if it was not time that he and Jack were in the study for their morning recitations. When the two had left she turned toward her husband.

It was from her husband that the boy had inherited his longing for the wild. Lord Greystoke's parents had
